CENTREVILLE.

The April session of the municipal council met on Monday last. Several questions of importance were on hand and the hall was crowded. The question uppermost in the minds of most of those attending seemed to concern the town hall, for on every hand are heard conversation bearing on "Enterprise, Centreville, new Town Hall."

A petition to the effect that the new town hall should be built in Enterprise was tendered to the council. One of the four moved that it be accepted but could find no seconder. Then the man that we all voted for last January proved his word by moving that the new hall should be built in our own town, found a seconder, and carried it. Thereupon the delegates from that little town to the east of us made for the door with the smile on the other side of their face. Next the tenders for the old town hall and lot were examined and it was found that Mr. F. W. Lochhead had secured the building for the sum of $76.00, and Mr. A. Church the lot for $10. Mr. Cyrus Edgar, who had completed the plans and specifications, tendered them and found everyone satisfied. One by one they took a built of brick or stone, steel roofed, ceiled with hardwood, and the cost placed at $3,000 each. The dimensions are 60 ft x 32 ft., and it will probably cost about $900.

On Monday evening the Track Committee met in the reception room of the King Edward, when the question was settled and Centreville reached. A new staff of officers is to be selected and are to start with a clean slate before them. We are glad to know that the society is in a flourishing condition and have quite a sum to their credit.

A song-ice was comprised of the hymns of Miss Fanny Crosby will be held in the Methodist church at the usual hour on Sunday morning.

We are sorry to state that Mrs. W. I. Fitzgerald, who has been seriously ill for the past three weeks, is no better.

The funeral of Mrs. P. Dewey, who died on Monday, took place on Tuesday morning, the remains being placed in the R. C. vault.

At present we are listening to a proposition upon which all agree. Namely that a steam mill with capacity and power to grind all grists for a radius of five miles, should be built. A bonus is to be raised to give the affair a starting point, and we are now looking about us for a competent man with some capital. The lack of such a necessity has been felt for some time, and as Centreville is the centre of a good agricultural district trade need not be considered as lacking.

To all whom it may interest may it be known that the contract for the erection of the new town is now open for tenders. Plans and specifications at the clerk's office.

A sugar social, under the auspices of the Methodist church, will be held in the town hall on Wednesday, April 12th. Admission 25c.

Mr. McGee, a former resident of our neighborhood, spent Monday and Tuesday renewing acquaintances in the village.

E. J. Hinch, our general merchant, has decided to go out of the dry goods, crockery, hats, caps and fur business, and will have some bargains in above lines.

Mr. Chas. Wheeler is improving his cheese factory by putting in a concrete floor.

The remains of Mrs. Peter Wagar, Tamworth, were interred in the Methodist cemetery here on Wednesday.

On Tuesday morning, after an illness of only four days, Mr. Joseph Dewey died of pleuro-pneumonia. The funeral took place this Friday morning at 10 a.m.

A MATRIMONIAL PSALM.

Tell me not in idle jingle,
Marriage is an empty dream,
For the man is ill that's single,
And things are not as they seem.

Life is real, life is earnest,
Single blessedness a lie;
"Man thou art, to man returneth,"
Hath not been spoken of the rib.

Not enjoyment and not sorrow
Is our destined end or way,
But to act, that each to-morrow
Finds us nearer marriage day.

Life is short and youth is fleeting
And our hearts though light and gay,
Still like pleasant drums are beating
Wedding marches all the way.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle,
Be a hero and get a wife.

Lives of married folks remind us
We can make our lives as well,
And departing leave behind us
Such examples as will tell.

Such examples that another,
Wasting life in idle sport,
A forlorn unmarried brother
Seeing, shall take heart and court.

Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate,
Still contriving, still pursuing,
And each one a good wife get.

NOW FOR A

SALE OF WOMEN'S RAINCOATS

Commencing Saturday, April 8th.

We are going to start in Saturday morning with a Sale of Women's Raincoats that will stir up the community. We have the ammunition to do it with, and we are going to place them on sale now WHEN PEOPLE NEED RAINCOATS THE MOST.

While we say Raincoats, keep in mind that most of them are Cravenettes, and made up with a snap and style about them so that they are nice enough to wear anywhere anytime. The kernel of this bargain is a lucky purchase of Sample Raincoats sent out to Canada by the J. & W. Campbell Co., of Glasgow. We are going to put them in a store with a lot of Coats from our own regular stock, and putting the two lots together gives us quantity, variety and sizes enough to keep the Sale going from Saturday, April 8th, and continuing April 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th.

Here is the way we will price them. A Coat that you can buy in the regular way 5.00 will be 3.75, the 6.00 kind will be 4.50, the 8.00 ones will be 6.00, the 10.00 Coats for 8.00, 12 50 Coats for 10.00, 15.00 Coats for $11 25.

Remember the dates, April 8th to 15th.

Blacks for Shirt Waist Suits—Our guaranteed Satin DeLyon, at 75c a yard, is one of the greatest values of the season. It will not cut, is serviceable and a good looker. Our Peau DeSoies at 85c, 1.00 and 1.25 a yard are not matchable for value hereabout.

Each for our "Belly Boy," our "Grey Double Seat and Knee Overall," our "Boss of the Road."

New Spring Suits and Top Coats.

You will be glad to turn from the winter weights as soon as you can, but turn in the right direction when you do. Turn to Robinson's. This Clothing Store has its ideals, ever a little in advance of achievement, but ever striven for. We never were clo-er to our ideals than this season in fabrics, patterns, cut, fit, making and style. Pointers: Longer sack coats, for one thing. Modified cone-shape shoulder, not abnormally padded. Young men's Trousers are pear-shaped at hips, those of maturer years show a tendency to be wider.

Blue and Black Suits—$6.00 to 12.50.
Raincoats—$7.50 to 15.00.
Covert Top Coats—$6.00 to 18.50.

Plain and Fancy Mohairs for Shirt Waist Suits.

Tremendous run on Mohairs. We seem to have struck the very weaves that would be approved of: Heather Mohairs, Melange Mohairs and Printed Warp Mohairs are the three favorites that we show and have to ourselves for Napanee. When you start out to select your next frock, keep in mind the fact that the Dress Goods Department has no equal in this part of the country either for style, variety or quantity. Correct trimmings for all fabrics that we show.?

Gentlemen, Let Us Make Your New Spring Suit.

Looking over our order book we note two pleasing facts: A gratifying number of old customers have placed orders with us this season, and the increase in the new customers tells us that our business of Merchant Tailoring is growing.

The new Spring stuffs are in; probably four hundred to be seen here, picked styles that we import direct from the Old Land. Most of them are in Single Suit Lengths that are not to be duplicated. We are making an unusual showing of Suitings at $17.50 to $20, in all the new colorings—also Blacks and Blues.

No reason why the most particular man cannot be SUITED HERE.

Women's Ready-to Wear Section.

In a busy quarter these days, with new and smart styles in Costumes, Shirt Waist Costumes, Jacket Costumes and Redingottes we are doing a rushing business.

OBITUARY

THE LATE W. H. HOOPER.

William Henry Hooper, son of the late Captain Edmund Hooper, M.P., Napanee, died on Monday evening, 13th March, at the General Hospital, at the age of 60 years and 3 months.

The deceased leaves a family of six to mourn his loss. Mrs. M. J. Von Strauben, of Winnipeg; R. H. Hooper, barrister, of Canterry; L. G. Hooper, of Edmonton, Frances, Mabel and Kathleen Hooper.

The late Mr. Hooper was a pioneer of the Northwest, being an honorary member of the Brandon Old Timers Association. He was the founder of the W. H. Hooper Company, and was perhaps the most widely known and most successful real estate agent in the Northwest, having had a large clientele throughout the United States and eastern Canada. His career both here and in Manitoba being one of unremitting success. He also controlled probably the largest area of wood land of any individual in the Edmonton district.

Although his illness was protracted his death came as a shock to a large circle of friends and acquaintances, being caused by a second paralytic stroke.

The funeral will be held from the Church of England on Saturday afternoon. Friends and acquaintances will please accept this intimation.—Journal, Edmonton, Alta.

DAVID C. HINCH.

On Friday, March 31st, a gloom was cast over our village, Camden East, by the death of David C. Hinch, of this place, after an illness of five days of pneumonia, at the age of thirty-two years and six months. Deceased was a son of Nicholas Hinch, and leaves a wife and one son to mourn the loss of a kind father and loving husband. On Sunday, 26th ult., he was in his usual health and took Mr. Simpkins, of Newburgh, to Yarker, on the handcar, and came back to Newburgh and got a coffin for Mr. Hinch's father-in-law and took it to Yarker, as the roads were impassable. He also took Rev. Radcliffe to Yarker in the evening to hold service there, and returned home about 9.30. About midnight he was taken sick and all that medical aid could do was of no avail, and death ended his sufferings on Friday evening. The funeral services on Sunday were held in the Church of England, the Rev. Radcliffe preaching an eloquent sermon. His text was "For the love of Christ constraineth us." The church was crowded and as many more could not gain admittance. One could see by the tears shed that Camden East had lost one of its kindest citizens. No night was too dark or stormy for Dave to lend a helping hand to those in trouble. The R. of Q. Ry. sent a beautiful wreath, he being an employee.

MRS. ENOCH SNIDER.

The death of Mrs. Enoch Snider, of Thorpe, which occurred last Friday morning, 31st March, at her home, proved a great shock to her many friends. Deceased had been in very poor health for several months but that dreadful disease, pulmonary consumption, took her quite suddenly just in the prime of life, only 35 years, March 26th. Her maiden name was Ella Amey, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Amey, near Wilton. She was married to Mr. Enock Snider seventeen years ago, and leaves to mourn her loss four children, Courtland, aged 15 years, Rupert 12 years, Kentha 5 years, and Garnet, a baby of 2 years old, besides a loving husband and parents, two brothers and one sister. The funeral took place last Sunday afternoon at two o'clock at Wilton church, and was largely attended. The services was preached by her pastor, the Rev. Mr. Whatmore, who visited her during her illness. Her end was peace. She was converted in her youth and lived her life suffering with Christian fortitude. The remains were placed in Wilton vault to await interment in the family plot. The bereaved husband and relatives receive the sympathy of the entire community.

MARY McNEIL.

beloved wife of George Walker, died at her home 5th concession of Camden, April and, 1905, aged sixty-eight years and three months. Deceased was only ill about four weeks, of heart disease, by the family not thinking her dangerous. On Thursday, before her death, she received a shock from which she never fully rallied. Mrs. Walker was born in the Township of Richmond, near the place where she spent her married life, being a daughter of the late Neil McNeil, of Richmond. All who knew Mrs. Walker have nothing but good to say of her. Ever ready to help in trouble or distress she was beloved and respected by all. A kind neighbor, faithful wife and loving mother. Truly the world is better for her having lived in it. Besides her husband she leaves two children, Miss Mary at home and John residing in Richmond, to mourn an irreparable loss. The religion Mrs. Walker was a Presbyterian. The services took place at the family residence, services conducted by Rev. Conn, Napanee. The remains were deposited in Newburgh vault, later to be interred in Camden 9th concession church cemetery.

ADELAIDE CARD.

Wife of Mr. Charles Wagar, died in South Napanee, Sunday morning, April 2d, aged 55 years and 3 months. Deceased was the youngest daughter of the late Amos Card, and was born in Napanee, and moved to Hay after she was married. Deceased had been very poorly for a number of years with heart trouble, and especially the last few weeks of her illness. Deceased was patient and fully prepared to cross the river from which no traveller returns. She leaves a husband and two sons, Isdell and Johnson, to mourn a kind and loving mother and wife. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon and was largely attended. The remains were placed in the Eastern cemetery vault.

JOHN W. PRINGLE.

A former respected resident of Napanee, died at Toronto on Wednesday, 5th April, in his sixty-ninth year. Deceased removed to Toronto thirty years ago, and leaves a wife and six children. The daughters are Anna and Minnie, and the sons, Allan, Russell, Charles and John, all of Toronto. He also leaves five brothers, Alfred, of Toronto; Healey, Port Colborne; Joseph, Mador; Lewis, Belleville, and S. W. Pringle, Napanee.

EVERYTHING ABOUT A WEDDING.

The New Idea Woman's Magazine for May contains a number of articles apropos to the ever-recurrent spring wedding. Charlotte Millward writes on wedding-gowns, and gives it as her opinion that, although sentiment still inclines many girls to the traditional white satin for their bridal dresses, this material is not nearly so much in accord with the fashions and taste of the present day as the softer and newer creations in chiffon, lace, net, supple silks, crepe de Chine or crepe de Paris. An article by Frances Welsh-Britton takes up the etiquette of weddings, and details the proper forms, from the invitations to the rice shower. Wedding-breakfast menus and recipes for home-made wedding-cakes are given in the cooking column; and Esperance Goodlove contributes an article on marriage as it appeals to the business woman, in which she concludes that the girl who has had her liberty, who has fought her own battles and heartily enjoyed the things and is will be forwarded post-paid by Paris Medicine Co., St. Louis, Mo.

ABOUT RHEUMATISM.

There are few diseases that inflict more torture than rheumatism and there is probably no disease for which such a varied and useless list of remedies have been suggested. To say that it can be cured is, therefore, a bold statement to make, but Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which enjoys an extensive sale, has met with great success in the treatment of this disease. One application of Pain Balm will relieve the pain, and hundreds of sufferers have testified to permanent cures by its use. Why suffer when Pain Balm affords such quick relief and costs but a trifle? For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 7-4d

RICH MAN AS A PAUPER

LOATH TO UNLOAD HIS RICHES AND BEND KNEE TO CHRIST.

WILL NOT GIVE UP HIS ALL.

Even to Obtain a Seat in the Kingdom of God Rich Man Finds It Hard to Surrender His Earthly Possessions and Get Down on His Knees at the Mercy Seat.

Entered accepting to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dyer, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 2.—The self sufficiency of wealth, the obstacles its possession opposes to spiritual progress and how these may be met and made the theme of to-day's sermon, the preacher choosing as his text Mark x 26, "Than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."

I am thankful that I was so fortunate as to visit Palestine before the railroad engineers had made their surveys and built their bridges and before their depots and profaned the sacred hills with the shriekings of an onrushing locomotive. For can the Holy Land remain much longer distinguished by the habits and customs, the usages and conventionalities of Abraham and Davidic and Solomonic and prophetic and apostolic days when the iron rails have been run near the family burying ground of the Machpelah cave, when the freight care bring the luggage formerly carried in camels' packs and when the dragoman's strange, weird, thrilling stories and midnight tales have given place to the harsh and metallic voice of the conductors who call: "Next station is Bethlehem!" "Change cars for Jericho and the Dead Sea!" "All aboard for the Grand Trunk line for Bersheba and Damascus!" "Passengers for Capernaum and Magdala take forward car!" "Ten minutes for refreshments at Jericho's well!" "All aboard! All aboard!"

Almost sacrilegious does it seem to mention a railroad train in connection with these sacred places. In order to interpret the literature of the Bible aright you must spread it in the countries and the habits and the lives of the people of past centuries. You must have those sandals and the tent and the camel and the robbers upon the hillsides and the sheepfolds and the shepherds. You must have just such a Holy Land as I visited a few years ago and the Holy Land which I hope some time yet be able to visit, before the railroad tracks have honeycombed the sacred hills, as they are now going and the modern has length and breadth of our own land. But if you are to see the Holy Land as I saw it you must go soon. Soon the those eastern cities will have their different depots and their rival railroad lines.

We would not use to-day the railroad depot for a pulpit. By the ancient camel's pack, and not by the modern freight car, I would interpret the words of my text. In every caravan or even two merchants coming over the western hills toward Jerusalem. They are pounding and prodding the camels after their camels along as fast as they can make them travel. But the camels are very heavy laden. The road is steep. The pace is slow. I hear one of the drivers turn to the other and say, "Isaac, I doubt if we will get to the city walls before the gate is shut." "Too bad," says the other man. "That means we are going to have an awful struggle making the old camels go through the needle's eye." "Yes," answered the first speaker, "but we must do it, or else the robbers will steal from us all we have. There, see, the gates are shut. We will have a hard job ahead of us."

The two men approach the city wall with its shut gates. "Ho, watchman, ho!" they cry. "Open unto us; open unto us!" "Nay, nay," says the watchman; "that is against ahe law. But I will open for you the needle's eye if you wish." "All right," answer the merchantmen; "we will come in by the needle's eye."

With that the watchman descends from his lookout tower, and within the gate he opens a door. This heavy door is cut into the gate as a panel can be cut out of a door. It is called the needle's eye. In the meantime the camels are unloaded. Then the drivers command the big stupid brutes to kneel, and by coaxing and coaxing beatings and growlings and cursings the camels on their knees are compelled to drag themselves through this small door. All the baggage which was packed on the camels' backs is carried within the city walls in the arms of the merchantmen. Then the door, or the needle's eye, is shut, and the great city, fearless of outside foes, sleeps on. Ah, it was no easy matter to make a camel go through the needle's eye. It was no easy manner for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. Christ says it. In the case as in the other the needle's eye is a low door. The low door means that we must bend to God. The low door means that we must humble ourselves and get down on our knees. It means that we must be just and true to those with whom we come in contact in the every day affairs of daily life.

Let me digress here a moment and speak a few words in reference to spoiled women. I do not believe there are as many spoiled men as spoiled women. Men, as a rule, have not as great a chance to be spoiled down at the store as some women have to be spoiled in the home. They would become just as spoiled if they had the chance. But the women! Oh, how many of them are spoiled in the home! Did you ever stop to think that a great deal of the so-called nervous troubles of this world among women are simply due to fits of temper? The young girl grows up as a spoiled child in her father's house. Then she marries. She boasts that no one has ever been able to govern her. She is right. She will not even govern herself. Then, when something goes wrong in the home, as a married woman she scolds and sulks and refuses to eat and to sleep. She cries and goes on until she works up a few spasms of hysteria and physically becomes as rigid as a board. I have been in many homes as pastor and friend. I have seen there many women said to be nervous wrecks who were not nervous as you or I might become nervous from overwork. They were not nervous wrecks from overwork. They were simply because they let their tempers as spoiled children get the better of them. Many nervous women could be cured of the hysteria if some one could give them a good, wholesome rebuke and then go to bed, as mothers punish their children and then put them to bed if they did wrong. The symbol of the camel as applied to the rich man in reference to his meanneseses toward his fellow men reminds me of the story so many so called nervous women who let their tempers get the better of them merely because they are spoiled children. Of course in making this sweeping statement I am not saying that all nervous people are evil tempered, but some of them and many of them certainly are.

But as I see these richly laden camels coming over the hillsides toward the shut gates of the Jerusalem walls I see skulking in the distance other forms. They are the robbers and the thieves and the highwaymen. They are the murderers who for one roll of cloth would be willing to cut a man's throat. If these merchantmen hesitate one minute in unloading their camels and in making them go through the eye of the needle, down these miscreants will swoop. They will slay the owners and carry away the goods as rich spoils.

If these two merchants had been only humble peasants, if they had been carrying afoot or astride a cheap four footed beast of burden, such as Mary, the mother of Jesus, rode when Joseph, the carpenter, was taking her down to Bethlehem the night before the most memorable of all Christmas days, no attention would have been paid them, but there they are this evening riding camels. Each camel is worth a large sum of money. Each one of these camels is heavily laden with the richest of merchandies. Do you wonder that these robbers skulking upon the hillsides and crawling behind me. I feel absolutely weak and helpless. Lead us not." Do you make that prayer daily? With a big bank account and a home upon a fine boulevard and multitudes of friends, do you ever, on your bended knees every day, like a camel going through the eye of the needle, and say: "Lord, then art my God and I am of the air and clothe the lilies of the field, clothe and feed me, guide me, protect me. I am helpless without thee?" Do you make that prayer daily? Oh, rich man, rich in money, but poor in grace, down on your knees! Down on your knees in supplication. Lift higher to-day the throne of God by bending low over the lowest throne steps. Down, rich man! In the name of Jesus, down!

The needle's eye of the Jerusalem gate is very low. I also find that it is very narrow. Not only does a camel have to bend his knee to get through it, but he also has to have his packs taken off his back. If this is not done the camel, with its distending loads hanging upon its sides like our grandfather's saddlebags, will, of course, not get through the narrow door. The rich man cannot get through the needle's eye of the kingdom of God unless he stops carrying around with him his great packs of meanneseses and contemptibilities and selfishnesses which often he is accustomed to deal with his fellow men. And yet how hard it must be for a rich man to be absolutely just and kind and truthful and forgiving to those whom he meets in the ordinary walks of life. And the more I see of rich men the more I find that, as far as their dispositions are concerned, they are in the impossible position of those who were brought up as an only child in a family and have every temptation under the sun to make them spoiled children and spoiled men.

Selfishness? In those days you did not know what selfishness was. You did not have a wife to wait on you, as some of us have now. And you grown woman, you remember the first time you awoke to what a fiend selfish life meant. A little cousin visited your father's home. She was an only child. Instead of letting your father's own little doll she kept it all to herself. When she had a box of candy she would eat a piece and then put the box away in her bureau drawer. If she went for a carriage ride she always wanted to drive or else she would pout. If there was a game she always wanted to be the leader or else she would not play. She was selfish. She was contemptibly contemptibly selfish. You could not understand her actions until your mother took you in a side room and said: "May, I am sorry that you and Helen cannot play happily together. But you must be very patient with your cousin. Remember she is an only child. Remember at home everything she wants is given to her, and no one ever crosses her. You must be patient with her, for she cannot help it. She forgets to and she is not alone to be blamed for it."

The rich man may not be all to blame for being selfish. As the eastern camel goes swinging along with his head high up and carry what little eyes he has may kick in the street, so the rich man may not be entirely at fault because he treads upon the rights of others. He cannot look at the world through ordinary eyes. The world toadies to him and cringes and fawns over him until after awhile he is apt to think he is the smartest, noblest, kindest, sweetest up and carry what little eyes he has to be being who ever lived. His feelings to think his blood different from all other blood and his life better than all other lives. Further, rich men amid all the sycophants fawning and cringing about them, I want to tell you clearly and emphatically that God has not one code of morals for the rich and another for the poor. The same rules of life and the same rules of justice and kindness and gentleness and forgiveness and love in our every day affairs, in our fellow men, the needle's eye is a low door. The low door means that we must bend to God. The low door means that we must humble ourselves and get down on our knees. It means that we must be just and true to those with whom we come in contact in the every day affairs of life.

self. When there is a mission to be started in the slums with your pocketbook you hire a missionary. You be a missionary—go yourself. No one can do God's work well as a proxy. If there is a Sunday school teacher needed and your pastor does not know where to turn do not say: "Pastor, here is money. Hire an assistant." Say: "Pastor, here am I. I want to go myself." Don't you want to get the good which alone can come from Christian service? "Lord, send me!" should be the cry of every Christian man, whether he be rich or poor.

Rich man, God is calling you to go and work in his vineyard. The harvest is ripe, the laborers are few. What would you think if when the thirteen colonies were in a death grapple for their liberties George Washington had stayed at home and sent a substitute to the war? If George Washington, the rich man, could afford to give up everything for his native land, you can afford to give Christ your personal service. Christ wants your money? Yes, he also wants you. Woman, society woman, woman with your diamonds and silks, you cannot afford to send a servant to represent you in church work. Christ wants you and your husband are drifting away from grace is due to lack of Christian example. Your children, children of wealthy parents, never think you are above working in the young people's societies for Christ when you want you. He wants you to consecrate your possessions to his cause, but he wants you also. Let the rich man and the rich woman, the rich son and the rich daughter, as well as the Christian, build their crowns of joy in the gospel chariot and pull all together.

Niagara in Harness.

On the Canadian side of Niagara power stations aggregating 285,000 horse power are under construction, and this total is to be increased after a time to 405,000 horse power. This stupendous figure is compared by The Financial Review with the grand total for the world, which is only 1,483,000 horse power. The American side of the falls has 150,000 horse power is developed, but the entire Niagara Falls district about 625,000. Long-distance transmission will have to be resorted to if the Canadian Falls are to be developed in the next 30 years. The United States has at present 527,467 horse power, Canada 225,725, Italy 210,000, France, 161,342, Switzerland 132,202, Germany 81,077, and Sweden 71,000.

FOODS AND FOOD PRODUCTS

Prof. M. A. Gray, chemist, lectured last night on "Foods and Food Products," in the National History Society's rooms, Toronto.

The lecture was most exhaustive and instructive, dealing with the growth of foods, its constituents, and the electrical treatment of flour. He said that the mother's little could be said concerning the percentage of nourishment contained in the different breads made of oats, barley and hard wheat, as it varies from year to year.

Speaking of chemical experiment, Mr. Gray pointed out what had been done in this line in regard to wheat, during the last ten or twelve years in the different experimental stations of the United States. It was but very recently, however, that laboratories had been established in connection with flour mills, but they have already demonstrated their utility.

As to the purification of flour by electricity, the speaker remarked that it is about two years since this process was adopted and the development has been wonderful. A beautiful silvery whiteness is produced by the passing of the air which has been passed through a flaming electrical discharge. The flour has also, by this treatment, lost its baking qualities and commands a better price. The Ogilvie Flour Mills Company, Limited, of this city and Canada, and one of the first in America, to make use of this purifying and sterilizing process.

DROPPED ALL OTHERS.

"I dropped all liniments but Nerviline after I saw it," writes Mr. Wm. Stuck of "to relieve pain," writes E. S. Benton of Bay Roberts, Nfld., "and cured my croups or sick. Nerviline cures them, if it don't cure anything else." Nerviline will turn up. Nerviline is ever ready. We have Nerviline to relieve pain, rheumatism and all kinds of aches and pains; it's a good one, any druggist. Dr. Hamilton's Canadian remedy for the past fifty years has been Polson's Nerviline—nothing better made.

BRIDGE VS. FRESH AIR.

April Canadian Magazine.

The rage for Bridge holds in its some material for thought. Any one who has played Bridge and can to have played Bridge means not to have lived in the strenuous days, about which Mr. Gladstone and other women's dispositions that this game has Physicians who are ardent Bridge players explain it as the that the danger lies in the close confinement, as some enthusiastic players in our cities "play Bridge" each afternoons a week and sometimes a'x; that this habit of filling one's self away from the sunlight and fresh air for three hours each day in an artificial light is scarcely beneficial to the physical well-being of a woman's. This is no doubt true, but there is a deeper danger even than this. It is the effect on the nerves which this game might say moral, side of one's nature. There is a spirit of selfishness and a peculiar covetousness which is brought into play five days a week, holds a danger of implanting permanent results.

Apart from all underlying thought, women are inveterate Bridge players should remember that the light and fresh air are more worthy of being sought after than extraordinary skill in any prevailing rage.

A Spring Need.

THE INDOOR LIFE OF WINTER IS HARD ON THE HEALTH.

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That's the spring feeling. The season—close confinement indoors during the winter months; breathing the impure air of badly ventilated offices and workshops. The trouble may manifest itself in a variable appetite, little pimples or eruptions of the skin, a feeling of weariness, and perhaps an occasional headache, or a twinge of neuralgia or rheumatism. Perhaps you think the trouble will pass away—but it won't unless you drive it out of the system by putting the blood right with a health-giving tonic. And there is only one absolutely certain, blood-renewing, nerve-restoring tonic—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Thousands of grateful people have testified that these pills are the best of all spring medicines. They actually make new blood; they brace the nerves and strengthen every organ of the body. They make tired, depressed ailing men, women and children bright, active and strong. Mrs. Ferguson, Ashfield, Ont., says, "For the benefit it may be to others I take much pleasure in saying that I have found wonderful benefit from the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. When I began taking my present course I was run down that I could scarcely go about the house. I was also troubled with palpitation of the heart and weak spells, but the pills have fully relieved me and I am now enjoying better health than I ever expected to have again."

If you want to be healthy in spring don't dose yourself with purgatives—they only weaken—they can't cure. Don't experiment with other so-called tonics. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at once and see how quickly they will banish all spring ailments. Keep the blood active and strong. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HOW TO SECURE A HIGH QUALITY OF CHEESE.

Producers of milk and cream would serve their own interests to consider carefully at this time the facilities afforded for the manufacture of a first-class product by the factory which they expect to patronize during the coming season. The Provincial Government has engaged a staff sufficient to give instruction at a nominal cost, and will contribute one-half the actual outlay—to all factories which make application at once. The terms of these factories are alive to their best interests they will see to it that the proprietor and his staff undergo instruction to give monthly visits and point out to the maker mistakes in methods, suggest improvements in quality so as to meet the demands of the market as nearly as possible, defects in cheese, cleanliness, the necessity for proper temperature in curing, the proper shape and size of cheese.

The instructor will also make it his business to test the individual samples of milk, not only for the butter-fat content, but for the detection of adulterations. By taking a small sample from each lot and making a curd test, the instructor is enabled to find the lot of cats which are causing trouble in manufacture. He very often finds that the trouble arises from milk produced by a patron who has the best of buildings, and is apparently following the rules of cleanliness in regard to cooling and caring for his milk. A rusty can, or one with seams not properly soldered, rusty surroundings, proximity to hog-pens, etc., may be causes of contamination.

Do you wish to have the services of an experienced man who is devoting his whole time to the work, to give advice and instruction to your maker as well as to yourself through the season? If so, see that the proper party makes application for the instructor at once. This is a duty which every patron owes to himself as well as to our most important agricultural industry. If the place which we now hold in the foreign market is to be retained, greater effort must be put forth by both makers and patrons. Cleanliness must be made as follows; For places east of Toronto, G. G. Publow, Kingston, Plevna and other works in the eastern counties of York and Simcoe, G. H. Barr, London.

MR. HILL HAS PROVED IT.

Toronto Man Explains How He Gained Health After Suffering a Few Weeks. Remarkable Statement.

At 80 Fuller Street, Toronto, lives a man who claims to have proven beyond the shadow of a doubt that Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill is the most powerful remedy ever introduced. His name is W. A. Hill, and he makes the following statement:

"I was very much run down, and had a constant pain in my side, which I thought was in my liver. I fully believe my days were numbered, but I was induced to try a treatment of Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill, and the results were marvellous.

"After a short time I found myself much relieved, and after a week which I am thankful to say I felt entirely cured. I have since taken occasion to have called their attention to the fact, and they have always expressed themselves as pleased to hear of the benefit I received from their medicine."

KITCHEN ECONOMY.

With the uniform high charges for gas, the gas stove is ordinarily the most expensive piece of kitchen machinery, and at the same time it is the one least understood by the average housekeeper. Miss Parloa and Maj Delineator under the topic "Gas Stove and Refrigerator Knowledge" Isabel Gordon Curtis has some suggestions in this connection which rob the subject of some of its terrors of cost. Young housekeepers particularly will profit by reading the article, which is the series "The Making of a Housewife." Other topics of domestic interest in the same number are "A Crown of Lamb," illustrated for Easter service, "Left-overs," also illustrated, and a fund of kitchen lore and recipes under the headings "A Nest of Eggs," "Novel Methods of Preparing Grapefruit," "New Fillings for Layer Cakes," and "Household Hints."

TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chambers,
Napanee, April 3d, 1905.

Council met in regular session on Monday evening, Mayor Lowry presiding.

Members present—Counc lors Normile, Meng, Graham, Kimmerly and Simpson.

Minutes of the last regular meeting were read, and on motion were confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From W. A. Grange, Town Clerk, saying that the Planing Factory By-law had received a two-third majority. Adopted.

From Manly Jones, Esq., saying that in driving into town recently his horse stepped into a hole on Piety Hill and injuring the buggy and harness and asked $2.00 damages. Referred to Street Committee to report.

From Elgin County asking if this Council to send one or two representatives to wait upon the Legislative Assembly and get the Municipal Act amended re municipalities being liable for damages when roads are not in repair. Filed.

A petition was received from Geo Fitzpatrick, J. McClintock and others, asking that a new board walk be laid down on east side of Belleville road, from Bridge street to Mills sts., as old one is all gone. Referred to the Street committee to report.

The Finance committee presented the Treasurer's monthly statement and balance sheet, which was adopted.

Coun. Meng, Chairman of the Poor and Sanitary committee, said the appropriation for that committee was nearly wiped out, and asked for more funds.

Coun. Kimmerly asked for information as to what had been done re collecting money for canning factory bonus. Mayor Lowry said the money asked from North Fredericks burgh was ready, but he had not heard from the north. He thought the money would be ready by the time the bonus was executed.

The contract between the Town of Napanee and Mr. Wm. A. Carson of Belleville was read and ordered to lay on the table. If it is, briefly, as follows:—Wm. A. Carson proposes to establish a planing factory in the Town of Napanee for the purpose of canning all kinds of fruits and vegetables, to erect the buildings and plant at least $15,000.00, and to pay out in wages at least $8,000.00 a year. The plant is to be in full operation within eighteen months, and sufficiently advanced so as to be ready for business not later than the first day of August, 1905, and will continue to operate same each year for ten years unless the same should be so damaged by fire, tempest or other causes beyond the control of Mr. Carson. The town is to furnish a suitable site (which will be paid for by special rate collected in the adjoining townships) on the south side of West st., just south of the railroad track, and to exempt the factory from taxes (except school tax) for a period of ten years, and to pay $75 a year for the purpose of procuring sufficient supply of water from the waterworks; to lay down a suitable sidewalk on the south side of the said Macdonnie West street where required.

Coun. Graham said that a gentleman, who drove in from Selby, made a complaint to him that the sewer pipe had dumped night soil into Mr. Chas. Stevens' barn, and the odor therefrom was very offensive. The matter was referred to the Chief of Police to notify the Health Officer.

Coun. Graham said something should be done to provide a cooler for the officers of the town to keep their books. He moved that the deputation that goes to Toronto be instructed to look into the matter of a proper file or desk. Referred to the Town Property committee to ascertain the cost, etc., of vault, safe, file, etc., and bring in estimate.

Moved by Coun. Graham, seconded by Coun. Simpson, that the time for the return of the Collector's roll be extended until next meeting. Cd.

The Treasurer said there had been nothing done towards collecting back money on sewer and private walks. The Clerk was instructed to look into the matter and see what it is done.

The matter of a house of refuge was brought up by Coun. Meng. Considerable discussion took place, when it was moved by Coun. Meng, seconded by Coun. Simpson, that the Mayor and Clerk be instructed to write to the proper authorities, protesting against the action of the County Council in trying to get relief from having a house of refuge in this County, as this County is in need of a house to build one at once, as it is urgently required. Carried.

ACCOUNTS.

The following accounts were ordered paid: Fire sentinel and By-law, $6.25; A. Vanluven, groceries, $2.00; H. W. Kelly, groceries, $9.85; M. S. Madole, sewer, $18.00; J. H. Perry, nightwatchman, $12.00; Wilson & Bros., two pairs rubber boots, $7.00; Bell Telephone, $7.00.

The Treasurer asked for a voucher for the sum of $126.75, which was granted.

Council adjourned.

$1000 PILE CURE.

A Thousand Dollar Guarantee goes with every bottle of Leonhardt's Hem-Roid—the only certain cure for every form of Piles.

George Cook, St. Thomas, Ont., writes, "Leonhardt's Hem-Roid cured me of a very bad case of Piles of over ten years' standing. I had used other cures but got no permanent cure till I used Hem-Roid. It cured Blind and Bleeding Piles and surfeited everything. Ointments and local treatments failed but Dr. Leonhardt's Hem-Roid cured me perfectly."

Hem-Roid is a tablet taken internally which strikes at the cause of Piles. $1.00 all Druggists or The Wilson-Fyle Co., Limited, Niagara Falls, Ont.

"Which did you last see your brother?" asked the magistrate, in a recent trial in a Police Court in Dublin.

"The last time I saw my brother, your worship, was about eight months ago when he called at my house and I was out."

The court broke into a roar of laughter.

"Then you did not see him on that occasion?" continued the magistrate.

"No, your worship," was the reply, "I wasn't there."

Wiseman is married at last. He used to say if he ever got married he'd wager his wife was right. He's pretty shrewd; he's got about it in the right way.

How? Why, he married her while she was asleep.

"Didn't I tell you that it was a secret, and that you were to tell it to no one?"

"You told me it was a secret, but you didn't say I wasn't to tell it to any one."

THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE.

Owing to faulty actions of the kidneys and liver, the blood becomes filled with disease germs that imperil health. The first warning is a backache, dizziness, headache and lack of vital energy. Act quickly if you would avoid the terrible ravages of serious kidney complaint. Gee Dr. Hamilton's Pills to-day; they cure kidney and other complaint for all time. No medicine relieves so promptly, nothing in all the world of medicine cures more thoroughly. For good blood, clear complexion, healthy appetite, the proper treatment is Dr. Hamilton's Pills. 25c per box, at all dealers.

A Scotch laboring man who had married a rich widow exclaimed for the plainness was accosted by his employer. "Well, Thomas, I hear you are married. What sort of a wife have you got?"

"Weel, sir," was the response, "she's the Lord Lieutenant, but I canna say she's His masterpiece."

"As the proverb says," remarked the demoralizer, "Eat, drink and be married."

"That isn't right," protested the moralizer. "It's 'Eat, drink and be merry.'"

"Oh," exclaimed the demoralizer, in disgust, "that's altogether different."

A CHICAGO LETTER.

Chicago, March 28th, '05.

Dear Beaver,—What delightful weather we have, just like summer—grass growing rapidly, and the wheat fields of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas, and indeed all the western states and as far as the early warm spring to be a full crop, and the North West are nearly through seeding, so that the market took a tumble 10c to-day on the strength of the prospects of a large crop of wheat this year, as also have oats and corn followed suit.

Fine strawberries on the market now for 60c per quart box, mushrooms 25c per quart box, green onions, lettuce, asparagus, spinage, cauliflower, cabbage, cucumbers, and all kinds of vegetables are arriving daily from the South and are to be got at reasonable rates. All kinds of fresh meats and fish to be had at reasonable prices also. Surely this is the city of cities to live in. I spent four hours yesterday on the elevated railways and street cars, and rode about 40 miles, and it only cost 20c for the whole thing.

Then the automobiles are as plentiful in the parks and boulevards as buggies in the country. They are expensive though, costing from $1,000 to 4,500, and then the storage, cleaning, etc., costs $25.00 per month, and then if you don't run them yourself it will take $3.00 a day to put a man on to do it. I wish I owned one; I would live here and run it. They charge for four persons the first hour $5.00, the 2d hour $4.00, the third hour $3.00, thus it is frequently paid for three hours' drive on the boulevard and parks, by those who keep them for pleasure. From $20 to $30 a day is made all summer by those in the business. I think that I shall get in the business as soon as I can make it work. It is a pleasant job and more money in it than two farms in Lennox, the freest hen hole. I suppose that it is good holiday weather with you yet. I may have to go to the Rainy River Valley as soon as spring opens and be compelled to defer this automobile project till another season, but I shall not lose sight of the scheme for another season. Do tell us in The Beaver what kind of weather you have there.

The Rock Island Railway is the system of railways, narrow gage and low cars. They ship through the air with the greatest of ease, making the golden state in three days. The Illinois Steel Works, the slaughter house and Board of Trade I were about two years ago, and it is useless to repeat it, but they all move along every day in the year the same as then. Marshall Field's Department store covers a whole block, and is 14 stories high with eight thousand employees inside of it. Then another building of the same size is used for wholesale storage. And the sky scrapers around these buildings are as plentiful as Indian wigwams in the west.

There are lots of Canadians here all right and one seems to meet them where in the city. Good bye this time.

FRED MEMBERY.

Valuable to Mothers.

Baby's Own Tablets are for children of all ages—for newborn babes or the well-grown child. They will promptly cure colic, indigestion, constipation, teething troubles, diarrhoea, and simple fever. The Tablets break up colds, prevent croup, and promote healthy sleep. They are guaranteed not to contain a particle of opiate or any of the poisons found in so-called "soothing" medicines. Every mother who has used these Tablets will speak of them in the highest praise. Mrs. T. Timlick, Pittston, Ont., says, "I have used Baby's Own Tablets with the most satisfactory results. I can recommend them to all mothers as a remedy for teething and other troubles of childhood." You can get the Tablets from any medicine dealer, or by mail at 25 cents a box by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

GIVING PUBLIC CONFIDENCE.

The J. C. Ayer company, Lowell, Mass., which compounds the great family medicine known as Ayer's Sarsaparilla, has decided to give to the public the complete formula for each of its medicines. This is the first time in the history of the proprietary medicine business that formulas have been given boldly to the public. The step was premeditated, however, and the announcement of Dr. Stowell was the climax of a plan on which he had been working for considerable time and feeling that the formula will appear on the label of each bottle containing this family medicine. Some people contend that Ayer's Sarsaparilla contains more alcohol than is really necessary. The preparation does contain some alcohol as a solvent, but the amount is very small. One would have to drink half a bottle of Sarsaparilla to get as much alcohol as in a glass of beer. The beer would cost 5 cents and the medicine fifty cents, so there is not much chance of any person acquiring a taste for Ayer's preparation because of its contents of alcohol. In fact the fact the Ayer's Sarsaparilla has a distinctive medicinal taste, the cry about the alcohol in the medicine is ridiculous in the extreme. The public is being swindled out of thousands of dollars by fake patent medicine venders, but the J. C. Ayer company has nothing to fear in taking the public into their confidence and telling them just what they are getting for their money. The effect of this other concerns will be watched with interest.

TAMWORTH WEST.

The pathmasters who were grieving over the snow lasting until the 12th of July, can cheer up now, as there is all gone, and the wagons and buggies are flying in all directions.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Cook have moved to Tamworth, where he intends working on the section.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Gale also intend leaving this place in the near future.

Messrs. M. Kellar and C. Johnson, Tamworth, spent Sunday at home.

Mrs. S. Kellar spent Friday with Mrs. J. Hinch.

Miss E. York visited the past week with friends in Marlbank.

Miss May Kellar is home again, after a week's visit with friends in Tweed and Marlbank.

It's an awful nice surprise to try to kiss a girl on the cheek and miss it because her lips are in the way.

Nine Nations

Now Use Liquozone. Won't You Try It—Free?

Millions of people, of nine different nations, are constant users of Liquozone. Some are using it to get well; some to keep well. Some to cure germ diseases; some as a tonic. No medicine was ever so widely employed. These users are everywhere; your neighbors and friends are among them. And half the people you meet—wherever you are—know some one whom Liquozone has cured.

If you need help, please ask some of these users what Liquozone does. Don't blindly take medicine for what Liquozone cannot do. Drugs never kill germs. For your own sake, ask about Liquozone; then let us buy you a full-size bottle to try.

We Paid $100,000

For the American rights to Liquozone. We did this after testing the product for two years, through physicians and hospitals, after proving in thousands of different cases, that Liquozone destroys the cause of any germ disease.

Liquozone has, for more than 20 years, been the constant subject of scientific and chemical research. It is not made by compounding drugs, nor with alcohol. It is made entirely solely from gas—largely oxygen gas—by processes requiring immense apparatus and 14 days' time. The result is a liquid that does what oxygen does. It is a nerve food and blood food—the most helpful thing in the world to you. Its effects are exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying. Yet it is a germicide so certain that we publish on every bottle an offer of $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. The reason is that germs are vegetables; and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen—is deadly to vegetal matter.

There lies the great value of Liquozone. It is the only way known to kill germs in the body without killing the tissue, too. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Every physician knows that medicine is almost helpless in any germ disease.

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone attacks the germs, wherever they are. And when the germs which cause a disease are destroyed, the disease must end, and forever. That is inevitable.

RHEUMATIC PAINS QUICKLY RELIEVED.

The excruciating pains characteristic of rheumatism and sciatica are quickly relieved by applying Chamberlain's Pain Balm and gently massaging over the parts. The quick relief from pain which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 14d.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

A gardener, seeing four birds destroying his fruit, fired at an old woman and only one. "How many remained?" Note.—The others flew away.

While more prevalent in winter, when sudden changes in the weather try the strongest constitution, colds and coughs and ailments of the throat may come in any season. At the first sight of derangement use Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. Instant relief will be experienced, and use of the medicine until the cough disappears will protect the lungs from attack. For anyone with any throat weakness it cannot be surpassed.

"Why in the world," asked the beautiful young widow, "have you promised to marry me? You don't love him?" "Oh, I just had to. He was desperate." "Bum. Said he'd go and shoot or drown himself, I suppose?" "No. He said he'd go and propose to you.

It Will Prolong Life.—De Soia, the Spaniard, lost his life in the wilds of Florida, whither he went for the purpose of discovering the Spaniards' Fountain of perpetual youth," said to exist in that little known country. But Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil will not perpetuate youth, but it will remove the bodily pains which make the young old before their time and harass the aged into untimely graves.

Where am I, I get sore on Holloway's Corn Cure? I was entirely cured of my corns by this remedy and I wish some more of it for my friends. So writes Mr. J. W. Brown, Chicago.

Mrs. Kicker—I'm sorry I ever married you!

Mr. Kicker—This is the first question we have ever agreed upon."

A Cure for Costiveness.—Costiveness comes from the refusal of the excretory organs to perform their duties regularly, from contributing causes, or disordered digestion. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, prepared on scientific principles, are so compounded that certain ingredients act upon the digestive tract, stomach and act upon the bowels so as to relieve the torpor and arouse them to proper action. Many thousands are prepared to give testimony to their power in this respect.

Clarence—Why did you tremble so when I first kissed you, dear? Was it a new sensation?

Angelina—Yes, and all of the others had been clean shaven.

In Nature's Storehouse There Are Cures.—Medical experiments have shown conclusively that there are remedial virtues in even ordinary plants growing by the roadside. Every one of these is a cure that cannot be estimated. It is held by some that future generations will be free from every disease which neglect and ignorance have visited upon man. However, this may be, it is well known that Parmelee's Pills purify the blood distilled from roots and herbs, are a sovereign remedy in curing all disorders of the digestion.

"Women," remarked Growella, "always have their purses filled with samples."

"Anyway," rejoined Mrs. Growella, "I no longer complain of servants. We don't get them filled in sample rooms."

Maybelle—George, you must be more careful about talking cold."

George—Why?

Maybelle—Father said he saw you going home last night thoroughly soaked.

HE WILL HAVE LIGHT.

On Wednesday morning one of our citizens, who enjoys a joke, followed his usual custom and went to the post office for his mail. Amongst the mailes was a box, nicely tied up and addressed to the gentleman in question. One would think that it contained a piece of wedding cake, or a present of some kind. The contents were of far more value, however. Neatly packed in the box was a nice wax candle and three matches, evidently intended to carry at night, as it would be much more convenient than a lantern, and would last longer than a match or two.

CHARLES HAWTREY AND HIS LONDON COMPANY.

At the Grand Opera House, Kingston, on Wednesday, April 12th, we are to have an opportunity of seeing Mr. Charles Hawtrey in his remarkably successful comedy "A Message from Mars." It is said to be a play that appeals to everyone for its heart-interest cannot fail to awaken an answering and universal echo. The company is especially strong and well balanced, and the scenic and mechanical effects will introduce many novel features. This piece holds the record of recent years, for long runs in London, and New York. In the latter city after an entire season of 365 days it has been revived with extraordinary success. This beats the record for any modern play.

MRS HUMPHRY WARD

England's Great Woman Novelist

Literary prophecies, like boomerangs, should be handled with extreme caution—they are so prone to recoil. When Matthew Arnold affirmed that no Arnold could ever write a novel, he did not look sufficiently far into the future to see Mrs. Humphry Ward, the daughter of his brother Thomas, recognized as the greatest woman novelist of her generation.

She was born in Tasmania in 1851, and when six years old was brought by her parents to England. Her father, a college professor, changed his college as frequently as his religion; his intense conscientious yearning for absolute truth whirling him from one faith to another like a cork caught in the eddy of a stream, and making him the fit prototype of "Robert Elsmere."

At the age of fourteen, when the family migrated to Oxford, she breathed the University atmosphere that was joy to her heart. She acquired knowledge as naturally as a bird learns to sing, and she was known as a marvelous linguist, being as perfect in German, French, Spanish and Italian as if each were her native tongue. At twenty-one she was married to Thomas Humphry Ward, one of the university dons, whose work as author, editor, critic, has given him a place in English literature. She was ambitious to write, and her earliest efforts were so weighted with learning and research that they were as heavy as dumb-bells and fit only for scholars to read when they wanted to get away from pleasure. She wrote many articles for the "Dictionary of Christian Biography," which paid little in coin but more in credit.

Mrs. Ward was thirty-one before she undertook real fiction with "Miss Bretherton," followed four years later by "Robert Elsmere," which captured the reading public of two continents. Before this, it is true, she had written a tale "Milly and Olly." Her translation of "Amiel's Journal" from French into English was an exquisite literary gem, expressing so perfectly the subtle windings of the mind and emotions of the simple Swiss professor, that it seems as if the author must have re-thought his whole diary in English, without the labor of translation. "David Grieve," which paid its author over $100,000, and others which paid fully as much, soon followed, among them, "Sir George Tressady," "Helbeck of Annisdale," "Eleanor" and "Lady Rose's Daughter." In her beautiful country home, in Hertfordshire, she does her literary work, seeking to escape from the storm of publicity her books have aroused and unavoiding all society but a little band of devoted friends.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by S. C. Black, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Board of Trade Organized

AN ORGANIZATION OF NAPANEE'S BUSINESS MEET STARTS OFF VERY AUSPICIOUSLY.

A public meeting was called to be held in the Town Hall, on Monday evening, to which nearly every business man in town responded, which augurs well for the success of the undertaking. The object of the gathering was to form a Board of Trade, as there are several matters of vital importance to our business men that need look after at once, among them being a ferry over Bay of Quinte.

Mr. J. C. Hardy was elected chairman, and, after explaining the object of the meeting, asked if all present were in favor of forming a Board of Trade. The feeling of those present was unanimous, and Mr. E. Loyst was called to the platform. As he had been working for a ferry over Bay Bay many years.

Mr. Loyst said we are sadly in need of body of men to look after the interests of our merchants and business men of Picton had bonused a ferry from Adolphustown to Prince Edward to the extent of $350 a year, and the Council of that town had added $150 thereto, making a total of $500 yearly, and were badly but surely getting the trade of the people of South Fredericksburgh and Adolphustown that rightfully belonge to Napanee, the County town. After considerable discussion Mr. W. T. Gibbard said the proper way to proceed would be to canvass the town and get the merchants and all other interested parties to enroll themselves as members, then meet and elect officers, committees, etc. Napanee had a Board of Trade once but it died a natural death. The time has come when we need such an organization.

Mr. F. W. Vandusen was of the opinion that Mr. Madole's motion ought to carry.

Mr. F. E. Hall said the matter of a ferry should be looked after at once. We are going to have a canning factory now and we need the ferry.

Mr. Hardy suggested that a Secretary be appointed for the minutes of this meeting and start a membership list now, which was done, Mr. W. T. Wallbridge acting.

On motion of Messrs. W. T. Gibbard and L. Madill, the membership fee was placed at $1.00.

The following gentlemen announced themselves as candidates for membership:

J. R. Dafoe,	Wm. Templeton,
Jno. Hirtle,	F. J. Pollard,
Madole & Wilson,	H. Henry,
Jno. Vandusen,	Thos. Johnston,
J. L. Boyes,	John Lowery,
W. A. Bellhouse,	F. F. Miller,
Dr. Chinneck,	F. B. Wallace,
W. J. Normile,	W. T. Gibbard,
W. F. Hall,	W. A. Stacey,
F. L. Hooper,	Fred Perry,
D. J. Hogan,	Robinson Co.,
Dr. J. Ellis,	Vanluven & Hambly
John Paisley,	W. J. Normile,
John Blanchard,	F. W. Hart,
E. Loyst,	Jas. Walters,
W. Keeler,	Boyle & Son,
Peter Gould,	T. H. Walker,
Hardy Dry Goods Co.,
C. A. Graham & Co.,
Nelson-Robinson Ch. Co.

The election of officers was then proceeded with, as follows:

President—John W. Robinson.
1st Vice Pres.—J. L. Boyes.
2d Vice Pres.—J. L. Madill.
3rd Vice Pres.—F. E. VanLuven.
Sec. Treas.—W. T. Waller.

On motion the following members were elected as an executive committee to act with the officers in assisting to place the Board of Trade on a sound footing: Messrs J. C. Hardy, T. B. Wallace, M. S. Madole, F. W. Smith, T. S. Henry, T. F. Rutlan, Dr. Sills, J. R. Dafoe, E. Loyst, J. A. Graham, W. T. Gibbard and W. F. Hall.

On motion it was decided that the above executive and officers meet after this meeting adjourns, and do what business that needs prompt attention.

At the meeting of the Executive committee it was unanimously decided to go over to Hay Bay, look over the ground and decide where best to place the ferry, and that any suggestions be inserted in the newspapers asking for the views of the travelling public as would be taken as a bonus to put a ferry boat on the Bay, and accommodation of boat to be taken into consideration.

On motion the committee were asked to go over Mr. T. H. Walker's wharf at the Dominion Bank, and Mr. W. A. Bellhouse, manager of the Merchants' Bank, and see if better arrangements and accommodation could not be secured, same as the banks in Picton afford.

LOOKED OVER THE GROUND.

On Wednesday afternoon the following members of the Board met at Mr. Walker's wharf on Bay to look the matter over and report to the Board:

The most advisable points to cross at, as given by J. W. Robinson, F. W. Smith, J. L. Boyes, Ernest Loyst, W. T. Gibbard, F. W. Vandusen, J. R. Dafoe, J. L. Madill, T. F. Rutlan, C. A. Graham and Wm. Templeton.

The proposed route from No. 1 Road to the Dominion Bank, Mr. T. H. Walker's wharf, to Mr. Wm. Templeton's, South Fredericksburgh was thought to be the most suitable and direct, but presents difficulties in the way of expense in constructing a road and erecting the bridge to the island. Mr. Joseph Hambly, owner of the island, was interviewed, and will give the Board whatever assistance he can, give permission to use the island, on favorable terms. The road is looked over to from Huffman's Point to the foot of Centre st., Shannonville. This route is longer, and would not be so convenient for people from the south coming to Napanee, and the expense of bridging is longer. Mr. Huffman was willing to help the matter along in every way, and considered the thanks of the committee for his kind attention.

The committee are considering the advisability of the commencement of laying a cable across the bay, by which the ferry boat would be hauled.

COUNTY POOR HOUSES.

A despatch from Toronto says, "At the request of several County Councils and on the recommendation of the Provincial Secretary, the Act, assisting to the extent of $4,000 in the cost of building county poor-houses erected prior to 1900, will be amended by extending the time limit. There are only seven or eight counties that have not erected poor-houses, and several deputations representing them have urged the extension of time." This amending of the Act will probably obviate the necessity of a special meeting of the County Council in regard to the proposed House of Refuge for this county.

A SUNDAY BLAZE.

About noon last Sunday, the fire bell clanged out its warning that a fire had been discovered. The fire men a few minutes later were hurrying in stationwards, and the news spread about that the Singer Mfg. Co. Oil shed, at the G. T. R. station, was on fire. No blame being near, they had to watch the progress of the fire, and direct their efforts to prevent the spread of the flames to a shed, a wooden structure, was but a covering for the company's wagons and sleighs, but the wagon contained about ninety gallons of coal oil, which with the rigs was totally destroyed. The origin of the fire is supposed to be from tramps who must have gained access to the shed during the night. The loss will be several hundred dollars.

FIFTY CENTS

IN some conditions the gain from the use of Scott's Emulsion is very rapid. For this reason we put up a fifty-cent size, which is enough for an ordinary cough or cold or useful as a trial for babies and children. In other conditions the gain is slower—health cannot be built up in a day. In such cases Scott's Emulsion must be taken as nourishment; a food rather than a medicine. It's a food for tired and weak digestions.

SUDDEN DEATH.

The announcement about noon last Saturday that Mr. John Boyes had died suddenly in his blacksmith shop, came as a severe shock to his loving wife, relatives and friends in Napanee. Deceased had not been well the night before, but went to his work as usual on Saturday morning. On the way he called on Dr. Ward, who prescribed for him and recommended him to go home until the 25th better. However, he went to work, and about eleven o'clock complained of a faint feeling, and fell to the floor. Medical aid was at once summoned, but it was too late, death having added another name to the long roll of victims of the disease. Deceased was in his sixty-seventh year, and leaves a widow, but no children, also a brother, Mr. Robert Boyes, of Napanee, the only one left of a large family. Deceased was born in Kingston, but for years conducted business in Napanee, being an expert workman and a popular citizen. The sympathy of the whole country goes out to the bereaved widow in her severe affliction. The funeral took place on Monday after-noon, the remains being placed in the vault of the Eastern cemetery.

Moved by A. C. Parks, seconded by T. G. Carscallen, M.P.P., that the Conservative Association of Lennox, in committee assembled, do express their high appreciation of the active services rendered by R. L. Borden, M.P., in the good fight for civil and religious liberty in the Dominion Parliament and do most strongly condemn and will ever oppose and fight against the present attempt of the Laurier Government to interfere with the provincial rights to manage all educational questions and the present Government's attempt to introduce foreign and ecclesiastical influence in the matters of the civil government of our fair Dominion, where peace and contentment exists to prevail and all sectarian race and religious friction ever be avoided; and also record our thanks for the able and our gifted member, our thanks for the able assistance he has rendered his leader in the present crisis of Canadian history.

A Guarantee to Mothers.

There is only one medicine intended for use among infants and young children that gives mothers a guarantee that it is free from opiates, and poisonous soothing stuffs. That medicine is Baby's Own Tablets. Milton L. Hersey, M. Sc., public analyst for the Province of Quebec, and demonstrator in chemistry for McGill University says,—"I hereby certify that I have made a careful analysis of Baby's Own Tablets which I personally purchased in a drug store in Montreal, and find that they do not contain the presence of any opiate or narcotic in them." These tablets cure all minor ailments of little ones such as teething troubles, simple fevers, colds, constipation, diarrhoea, colic and worms. They make little ones sleep naturally because they remove the cause of sleeplessness. They are a boon to all mothers and no home where there are young children should be without a box of Baby's Own Tablets. DEATH OF MR. CHARLES MACDONALD.

Oban (Scotland) Times, March 18th.

On Monday, the 13th March, the grave closed over the remains of Mr. Charles N. Macdonald, one of the best known of Glasgow Highlanders. Mr. Macdonald came to Glasgow when quite a young man, and along with his brother, Roderick, set up the business of C. and R. Macdonald, so well known in the west Highlands and Islands. Mr. Macdonald passed away at the comparatively early age of 59, and it is safe to say, no kinder face than his could be missed in the business centres of Glasgow, or on any Highland steamer that sails out of Glasgow or Oban. Mr. Macdonald came of one of the oldest septs of the Clan Donald, his father, Alexander Macdonald, of Peninarrin, being ninth in direct descent from Donald Derrach, son of Hugh of Sleat, Lord of the Isles. He deceased's oldest brother, Revd. Alexander Macdonald, Napanee, Ontario, Canada, being the undoubted nearest representative of this branch of the Clan Donald. The deceased gentleman linked in himself the genuine traditions of the past with the advance and progress of the present.

It may be said that practically in every home in Uist, Skye and the West Coast his cheery voice—now no more—will be sadly missed and long remembered. He was an ardent supporter of the Clan Donald Society, and a kind, warm-hearted patron of every Highland institution of Glasgow that was worthy of support. Manly, athletic, wiry, every inch a Highlander and cheerful to a degree, the memory of Mr. Macdonald will not soon be forgotten. His remains, wrapped in the tartan he loved so well, were followed to the Southern Necropolis, Glasgow, by a large number of Highlanders, met to unite in tendering his mother, his sisters and brothers, their deepest sympathy and heartfelt condolence.—Toronto papers please copy.

REDUCED A HARD SWELLING.

Mr. Gus E. Grenier, writing from Pembroke, tells how he was injured in a lumber camp. "A heavy log came against my leg and I was laid up with stiffness and a hard swelling. When I applied Polson's Nerviline I got relief. A few rubbings with this good liniment cured me." In the bush, Nerviline is indispensable; it cures neuralgia at once, rheumatism in a day, and disorders too. No person can afford to be without Nerviline. Use it for all internal and external pain. Large bottle 25c, at all dealers.

DEATH OF MR. BARRAGER.

Many residents of this district, particularly those of Sheffield township, will recall with pleasure their acquaintance with deceased, and Mr. L. D. Barrager, who, during the greater portion of his life, was a prominent resident of Addington. To those whose intimacy with him led to the highest esteem, the announcement of his death will cause sincere regret. During the past three years Mr. Barrager has been a resident of Smith's Falls, and though the period of his abode in that town was not more extended, it was sufficient to enable him to secure the lasting affection of all with whom he mingled. His death was not unexpected at this late age of 76 years, and having for some time bravely combated physical suffering without murmur or complaint, until relieved from further agony on the 28th of March last. The deceased gentleman possessed one of those amiable and lovable dispositions, magnetic and reliable that a slight acquaintance always developed a lasting friendship. Brilliant in intellect, mild in manner, noble in character, his companionship was highly prized by all who knew him. The recollections of his honorable, upright life will ever adorn the memory of one whose demise only revealed the charm of his personality and the excellence of the ideals after which he sought. He was a co-honored member of the Orange order, under whose auspices the funeral was conducted, and the following resolution speaks for itself. To mourn his loss are a widow, one daughter, Mrs. York, and a son, Mr. S. Barrager, all respected residents of Smith's Falls.

Smith's Falls, April 3d, '05.

Mr. A. Farrager,
Town.

Dear Sir and Brother.—We, the officers and members of L.O.L. No. 291, feel it our duty to extend to you and through you to your parents our sincere sympathy at the loss you and they have sustained in the loss of a father and grandfather and to most of all he was a stranger yet the principles of our beloved order draw us into close fellowship and brotherhood, and we feel that whilst you and your parents have lost a loved one, we on our part have lost a brother, and our Order an ardent supporter.

We therefore trust that the Divine Hand that has taken from our midst one whom we loved and honored, will sustain and support you and yours through life, always remembering that though we cannot understand these things now, some day our eyes shall be opened and they shall be revealed to us in the bright hours when first we met.

Think not we can e'er forget,
The' far away, far away,
Those bright hours when first we met;
Though far, far away

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

SEEDING IN MANITOBA.

Ninga, Man., April 5th, '05.

Dear Mr. Editor,—Please find enclosed $2 for which please send me The Beaver for another year.

This has been a peculiar year. A year ago we were very late in starting to sow, and the summer was wet and cold most of the time, and the grain rusted somewhat, but did not do much injury, in this part of the country.

The yield of wheat was from eighteen to twenty bushels per acre, and the price being so high, made it a good paying crop for anyone who had two and three hundred grades. My crop of wheat averaged about forty-eight cents per bushel.

This has been a beautiful winter, there being only about two weeks of cold weather, and it came the first part of January. We had very little snow, while all of February was spring weather. Some folks sowed a little wheat the last of February. We commenced to sow in general on March 26th.

We are going to have a lot of business done in the village of Ninga this year. There is to be an English church put up this summer, and the farmers are going to build a one hundred barrel grist mill. They think by making their wheat into flour they will realize a higher price. We have also a new Union bank in Ninga.

Enclosed is a flower called the anemone, the first spring flower, that comes as soon as the snow is gone.

I remain as ever an old subscriber,
GEORGE TOWNS.

The Yellow Holly

BY FERGUS HUME.

"No. He has not done so yet, but he told me very plainly that no one could prove that he had been in the house on that night, and that if he had been seen the coat would make people think it was I."

"Exactly what I did think," said George.

"Well, I had to hold my tongue, for you see I was in a most awkward position, and I could prove nothing. I think Mrs. Ward, but if the matter came into court things would look extremely unpleasant for me."

"I can see that," said Brendon, "but Bawdsey"—

"He has made himself secure, as no one can prove that he was in the house on that night. Even you thought it was I. I can't say for certain if Bawdsey committed the murder or if he really did find the woman dead as he said, but he is aware to his sorrow where medicines are handled.

Backed up by over a third of a century of remarkable and uniform cures, a record such as no other remedy for the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women ever attained, the proprietors and makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription now feel fully warranted in offering to pay $500 in legal money of the United States, for any case of Leucorrhea, Female Weakness, Prolapsus, or Falling of Womb which they cannot cure. All they ask is a fair and reasonable trial of their means of cure.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures headache, backache, nervousness, sleeplessness and other consequences of weak, ailing disease. "Favorite Prescription" makes weak women strong and sick women well. Accept no substitute for the medicine which works wonders for weak women.

THE MARRIAGE QUESTION.

The professor who announced that "love and romance die out with the sound of the wedding-bells," was the first to start the ball rolling. It would seem a brave woman who marries with this cloud as her reason, for we have not heard that there were fewer marriages during the year. There are unhappily married lives, but a large percentage of these unhappy homes are due to the illness of the wife, mother or daughter.

During a long period of practice, Doctor Pierce found that a prescription made up entirely of roots and herbs, without the use of alcohol, cured ninety-eight per cent. of such cases. After using this remedy for many years in his private practice he put it up in a form that can be had at any store where medicines are handled.

"Why do you not tell me what you think, Mr. Brendon?"

"I tell you I am busy, Mr. Brendon."

"And I tell you that I intend to have this interview," rejoined Brendon imperiously. "You talk a great deal about gratitude, Bawdsey, yet you are unwilling to put yourself out for me in the least degree."

Bawdsey became penitent at once. "It is true, Mr. Brendon, but I am very worried."

He cast a glance at the newspaper in his hand. "However, you have first call upon my time."

No more words passed. Bawdsey mounted the stairs and led George into a well remembered room. Brendon took a chair, and Bawdsey, with an anxious look, threw himself into another. The man's face was flushed, his red hair was in disorder, and his eyes were bright. As a rule he was calm and self controlled, so George conjectured that something particularly important must have occurred to upset him. "I had a conversation with Lord Derrington the other evening," began Bawdsey deliberately, "and we talked of you."

"Then you heard no good of me," replied Bawdsey, with a sneer. "Lord Derrington does not like me."

"That matters little. No liking can exist between a man in Lord Derrington's position and his paid servant."

"Oh, you call me that, do you, sir?"

"What else are you? Lord Derrington employed you as his agent to watch me, and that you have done."

"Not lately. I have given you a free hand."

"I'm in no case I have a free hand," said George loftily. "You were grateful enough for my service in saving your life to release me from your espionage, but had you not done so I should have taken means to put a stop to your dogging my footsteps."

"You would not have known had I not told you, Mr. Brendon."

"Oh, yes, I should. In any case, I should have seen Lord Derrington, and he would have told me."

"No, sir. He is your enemy."

"That is where you are wrong, Bawdsey. He is my friend and intends to recognize me as his heir."

"Has he learned where the marriage took place?" asked Bawdsey, starting from his seat and again glancing anxiously at the newspaper which lay on a small table at his elbow.

"No. We have yet to find that out. But he is quite satisfied from the hints of the late Mrs. Jersey that a marriage did take place."

"Whew! What means did you take to force him to recognize you?"

"I need state none at all," responded Brendon very dryly.

"Lord Derrington would not climb down unless he were made to."

"I have yet to learn that. The olive branch was held out by him. All this is none of your business, Mr. Bawdsey, and I only tell it to you to clear the ground for what I am about to say."

"First, Mr. Brendon, I should like to know your exact position."

"Oh, that is briefly explained, and there is no reason why you should not know what all London will know soon. Lord Derrington will join with me in searching for the register of marriage, and meanwhile will recognize me as his grandson and the heir to his estates. In a fortnight I leave my Kensington rooms and take up my residence with Lord Derrington in St. Giles square. Then I shall assume my real name of George Vane."

"And you will marry Miss Ward, I suppose?"

"That is entirely my business," said George placidly. "You will gain nothing by insolence, Bawdsey."

The man rose with a wounded air. "Upon my word, Mr. Vane," he said, giving George his correct name to show that he recognized his new position, "I have not the slightest intention of being insolent. I am glad for your sake that things are as they are, and pleased for my own, since Lola may now give up thoughts of you and turn to one else."

"That's all very well, Bawdsey," said Brendon quietly. "You profess a great friendship for me, but how can I trust you?"

"Why should you doubt me?" asked Bawdsey, still wounded.

"I only judge the future by the past, and since you are ready to play Lord Derrington false"—

"Who says that?" cried the man, sitting up.

"I say so. Lord Derrington has told me all."

"All what?" demanded Bawdsey, wilfully ignorant.

"All that took place on the night when you came to this house to impersonate him."

Bawdsey laughed, and his face cleared. "If that is your disagreeable business, sir, I can easily put that to rights."

"Can you explain why you drugged him, why you threatened him?"

"I did not threaten him."

"Lord Derrington informed me that you threatened to get him into trouble. That was why he consulted me, and that is why I have come to tell you that I will not have Lord Derrington you will fight me also."

"Don't press too hard, Mr. Brendon. I am willing to do you a service, and you are misjudging me," said Bawdsey.

"I am willing to hear what you have to say."

"If you are satisfied with my explanation, will you endeavor to get Lola to marry me?"

"I know nothing about you save what my grandfather told me, and his report does not bias me in your favor."

Bawdsey shrugged his shoulders. "Lola is able to look after herself," he said. "I think I mentioned that before. But if you are satisfied with what I am about to tell you will you help me?"

"I'll do my best," said George impatiently. "But I shall not advise her to marry you unless you prove to me that you do not intend to blackmail Lord Derrington."

"Nothing was farther from my thoughts," was Bawdsey earnestly. "It was to my interest that your grandfather should hold his tongue about my having been to this house"—

"He would not have known had you not told him voluntarily."

"Oh, yes, he would have discovered in some way. I thought it best to be on the safe side by confessing voluntarily what I had done. I said I could get him into trouble—and I admit that I could threaten him so far—simply to make him hold his tongue."

"You were afraid lest you should be accused of the crime?"

Bawdsey looked at George in surprise. "That possibility never crossed my mind," he replied calmly. "I certainly did not kill the woman. Do you think I did, Mr. Brendon?"

George shrugged his shoulders. "Going by circumstantial evidence"—

"Oh"—Bawdsey flipped away that objection with a snap of his fingers—"that's all right; I will explain. No, Mr. Brendon; why I wished Lord Derrington to be silent was that I might carry out a plan so as to learn who killed Mrs. Jersey."

"Then you are looking after the case?"

"On behalf of Lord Derrington. He has an idea that the assassin became possessed of a confession which Mrs. Jersey left behind her"—

"How do you know she left it?"

"Because I knew Mrs. Jersey very well, and, as I told you long since, I was once a boarder here. One day she let slip that she had some one in her power, and would leave the evidence out of that power behind her so that her enemy might benefit. I refer this to Lord Derrington. He insisted that I should try to discover the assassin, so as to get that confession, which compromised him, back again. To spur me on he has promised me a reward of a thousand pounds should I succeed in my mission and the conviction of the assassin. I have not money to marry Lola, I am doing my best. I came to live here for that purpose. Lord Derrington's finding of my visit to the house on the night of the crime would have jeopardized my plans, therefore I was obliged—as you say—to threaten him so as to make him keep silent. So far, do you blame me, Mr. Brendon?"

"No," replied George, after some thought, "the end justifies the means. But you might have adopted less rascally means."

"I have not adopted any. I have not asked Lord Derrington for money, so I am not a blackmailer; nor do I intend to claim from him anything but what is justly my due."

"And what is justly yours, if you please?"

"The reward of £1,000 for the discovery of the assassin."

"Oh! Have you learned who killed her?"

"Not yet, but I may learn. At present I confess I am in fault."

George pondered a little. So far Bawdsey spoke frankly enough, but he was a man who could not be trusted. However, since the man was in the toils of the law, he thought it best to betray no doubts lest Bawdsey should turn rusty. "Well, Mr. Bawdsey, I am in your hands," he said, "and I sincerely trust you will gain that thousand pounds. I am as unwilling as my grandfather that Mrs. Jersey's name in connection with this unfortunate business should become public. I am perfectly convinced that she was innocent, that confession stabbed the unfortunate woman."

"Do you think so?" asked Bawdsey, stealing a glance at the newspaper.

"I think it discovers it

EASTER MILLINERY.

Please let us have your order as early in the week as convenient. We do not want to disappoint anyone.

Covert Jacket Styles Never Were "Smarter."

Fawn Covert Jackets for Women are in great demand all over America. By getting right after the manufacturers we secured what we think will be enough to put us through the rush season. Just now we have a complete range of sizes from 32 to 42 inches. Just possible that we may run out of some sizes any day. Styles are very natty. We are showing a nice lot of Black Jackets made from Broadcloths and Silk. We did not forget the little girls either.

Fawn Jackets, $5 to 10.00. Black Jackets, Cheviots, $2 50, up. Broadcloths, $5.00 to 10.00. Silk and Lace Coats, for elderly ladies, $10 to 17.50. Broadcloths, $5.00 to 10.00. Girls' Jackets, pretty new Spring styles, $2.25 to 4.75.

Women's Shirt Waist Suits, Costumes and Skirts for Easter.

Assortments are at flood tide now, styles are settled and selections may be made with full assurance of their being correct. Best for reasons of choice not to postpone buying too late. We can make alterations and make promises now for sure delivery. It would be too bad to be disappointed at the last moment because of an overcrowd of orders in the alteration room, wouldn't it?

Shirt Waist Suits—Plain Navy and Plain Brown Lustre Suits, pleated skirts, very dressy, sizes 34, 36, 38—$6.00.

Brown, Navy and Grey Tweed, as nicely made and desirable as as any $10 suit you ever had—sizes 34, 36, 38, 40—special price $7.50.

Jacket Costumes—nifty little Jackets, new sleeves, Brown and Green mixtures, $10 to $15.

Skirts—all sorts of lengths from 32 inches long up. Hundreds to choose from. If you want one the chances are we can fit you in a few minutes. From $1.25 to $17.50.

New Imported Raincoats at Reduced Prices.

The reason New Coats are out in price is this: We were fortunate in securing two setts of Sample Coats from a Scotch Exporter. Being samples we got them without freight, duty and insurance charges being added. We pass them on to you at about the same reduction.

Hence $10 00 Cravenette Coats are 7 50. $8.00 Cravennette Coats are 6.00. $5.00 Cravenette Coats are $3.75

Don't hesitate if you want one. They are going.

Girls' and Boys' Kilted Serge Dresses.

Result—we have about 35 Suits, made from real Irish Serges, Navy and Cream, braid trimmed, suitable for children 3 years to 10 and 12 years, regular price would be $3 00 to $8 50, our price for them $1.79 a suit.

MAY QUICKLY WHIRL AROUND

Prayer for Restoration—Powerful Appeal for a Renewal of Spiritual Ties and for a Rekindling of Spiritual Activities—Review of the Years Shows Only Character Remains, All Things Else Change.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Rev. Dr. Chas. Stelzle, Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 9.—To the indifferent, and especially to the backslider who has gone back to the world and its pleasures, this sermon makes a powerful appeal for a renewal of spiritual ties and a rekindling of spiritual activities. The text is Psalm ii, 12, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation."

Oh, how quickly the mind can attune may whirl around! What we are to-day is no earnest of what we may be to-morrow. Rich and affluent, prosperous and happy now, that does not prove that we shall be rich and happy and prosperous with a multitude of friends hanging around us, next week or next month or next year. The night follows the day as well as the day the night. The people living in the South American republic of Chile reckon history by this or that or the other earthquake, which has made the heaving earth rock down homes and destroy whole cities and towns and villages. Some of us may reckon the passing years of our lives by the epitaphs which are chiseled upon the tombstones of our buried hopes.

"Year of 1872," we say. "Oh, that was the year of America's awful black Friday, when my fortune like a snow-flake melted away 'id an hour. Year of 1881. That was the year I lost my brother or wife or mother. Year of 1905. That was the year I was injured in a railroad accident. On account of that broken hip I lost my position at the store and had to give up my life insurance policy and become a poor, helpless invalid, a burden on my friends. Ah, I am not as I used to be. Once I had enough for myself and for others. Now I have less than nothing. I am dependent upon the world around me."

Better days! Oh, yes, scores of you have seen better days in your body, your property and your families! But, alas, many of us see only the sorrow of this world. Many of us have seen better days in our spiritual condition. I do not know whether God mother held, as do the Methodists of our day, that a good man might lose his hold on salvation, but one thing I re-echo—that he had fallen from grace. He had once tasted the joys of divine sonship. He had once walked aisle deep, knee deep, waist deep, chin deep, into the great depths of God's love and had drunk of those living waters. But now he has climbed out of those depths and stands shivering upon the fringes only of sin in the cold, biting wilds of sin. Thus we find him crying out in the words of our text: "Oh, God, restore unto me the joy of the happiness and the exhilaration and peace of my past gospel life! Restore unto me the joy of my salvation!"

Have not some of us need to offer the prayer of the psalmist? I know that there are many who are in the position of this psalmist. I know, furthermore, that if you will only return you may taste of the gospel joys again and they will be sweeter to you than they ever were before. An eminent minister of the cross a short time ago told me that the greatest blessing of a revival of religions was not found in introducing strangers to Jesus, but in bringing back to his service those who had once been found at the foot of the cross. "And," said he, "when these wanderers return they make the very best workers in our Christian churches." May God help me to present to some of you backsliders again to taste the gospel joys!

But I never did like praying for "everything in general and for the universe in particular." I like to be more explicit we would divide the psalmist's prayer under three or four distinct headings. To a man like this we would have you make the prayer: "Return unto me, O Lord, the joy which I experienced when I first began to realize the heights and the depths and the lengths and the breadths of thy sacrifices for me. Restore unto me the joy which came to my soul when years ago I first approached the communion table and said, 'Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief.' Then the tidal wave of happiness rolled over us in surges. Then we said to ourselves: "Saved by grace! Saved by grace! Oh, God, I thank thee that I have been saved by grace!"

Once our souls were aflame with gratitude for what God had done for us. No sooner were we converted than, like the psalmist, we arose in the evening and morning and at noon will I pray and cry aloud, and thou shalt hear my voice." But after awhile our joyful enthusiasm began to cool. We grew indifferent. We drifted back upon God. We now find reading the Bible a bore and praying a drudgery and talking to Christ and to others for Christ to talk to us a task instead of an endless pleasure. Oh, my friends, do you want to feel again the exhilaration which came over you on the day of your conversion? Then go back to the joy or my text. Make it day in and day out. Make it and continue to make it by an rehearsal of the love of God to you by the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Oh, that to-day we could have the thrill which we had through the years as we felt that God had purged us with hyssop until we were clean, that he had washed us until we were whiter than snow!

But gratitude to God for what Christ has done for us is not the only part of salvation that is buried and needs to be renewed. One of these joys that needs to be resurrected is the one we used to find in Christian service. No sooner were we converted than immediately we went forth to try and save some one else. Then when we brought a brother or sister to the cross there came over us another joy which we had not hitherto conceived, the joy of saving men and women for Christ. There is no joy on earth greater than that. Not even the joy of being saved ourselves can be compared to the joy of knowing that by the grace of God we have been able to save some one else from perishing.

The man of the world who has never experienced the joy cannot understand it. The exhilaration of it is couched in him in mystical and unknown tongues. For years and years I could not understand what Paul meant in his letter to the Romans. I felt he did not mean what he said. I believed he was only using an exaggerated figure of speech when he said, "For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen, according to the flesh." The more I studied that passage the more I felt and the feel to-day that Paul literally made this prayer, "Oh, Christ, if there is no way to save my lost sisters, my brothers, my people, but by blotting my name out of the book of life then destroy me and let me go." In other words, Paul said, "Destroy me if by my spiritual death others might spiritually live today." And yet is not this joyful willingness to be sacrificed to save others experienced by the new converts of to-day?

Oh, apostates; oh, ye negligent and slothful church members, standing idly about in the market place, while God's vineyards are filled with the ripest clusters just ready for the harvest, have you known in the past the joy of salvation in the saving of souls! Why, I can see even now the countenance of a past joy upon your faces as in the time when you used to labor in the Sunday school and the prayer and the meetings and labored with them to accept Christ. I can see you now going to your homes and most prayerfully and raptrously saying: "Pastor, keep on praying. We will get them. They are bound to give their hearts to Christ. We will get them yet." But now the world and the flesh have crept in, and you do not work for souls as you used to do. You do not have the old joy of saving souls. Oh, my friends, will you not pray that this joy may come to you again: "Lord, God, give me the old thrill of being saved by my service. But do more than this, Lord. Give me the joy of saving some one else for thee. If it be necessary in order that others may spiritually live, that I must spiritually die, then, as Paul wished, let me die for their honor and glory."

But in this psalmist's prayer we would find another joy. It is this: "O God, restore unto me the joy of Christian fellowship with Christians! O God, make me again love church services and the prayer meetings and the missionary gatherings and the convocation of the young people at the Christian Endeavorers and Epworth leagues and the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip! O God, may I desire to assemble with my disciples more than to go with any other class of people on earth!" You think this is a strange prayer? Perhaps I do not. When I make it, I know that one of the surest signs of the true Christian life is to be found in the desire of a Christian to be where other Christians are. Yet, if I mistake not, some of you now and then go to the prayer meetings or to Sunday schools or to our cottage prayer meetings and look upon these meetings as a bore, a drudgery, a tiresome hour, wasted for duty's sake. When you go to these meetings you do so under protest.

"Yes," you answer, "I do look upon these religious gatherings as a bore. But I am not responsible for my likes and dislikes any more than I am to be blamed because my favorite color is blue, my favorite flower a carnation, my favorite musician Beethoven, my favorite novelist Thackeray, my favorite artist Rubens and my favorite poet Longfellow or Tennyson. I like and I like and dislike what I dislike, and I cannot help it. Now, if I dislike to associate with the class of people who make up our distinctively religious gatherings, such as are found in the missionary society, I am not to blame. I am no more to blame than I am because I dislike codfish or mackerel and like apples and grapes."

Ah, yes, my brother, you are to blame. You are individually responsible for your likes and dislikes. If you do not care to associate with Christian people in Christian gatherings then it is high time that you learned to enjoy their society, and the quicker the better. Because I do not enjoy them is not that is no excuse why I should not learn to love these people. Supposing I was a dyspeptic, supposing I had for years been living on lobsters and veal and ham and pork and cabbage and highly seasoned meats and pastries, supposing on account of my dyspepsia I was sent to a sanitarium, what would be the advice of my physicians? "Put that man on the simplest diet." Because I tell my physician I do not like plain toast and milk and cold bread and good, wholesome, simple foods."

Now, my Christian friend, by the same law you may have a diseased spiritual appetite for spiritual association. If you cannot find enjoyment in communion with Christian people, then the sooner you learn how to enjoy their society the better. You are exactly in the position of the frivolous girl or the dissipated boy growing up in a Christian home. Such children are never happy unless they are off at some party or visiting some neighbor or attending some theatre. But after awhile they will find that the sweet, gentle fellowships of a Christian home offer more real joy than any of the exhilarating rock at a book by the glowing hearth in the sitting-room is one. The loving smile of a mother's or a wife's hand is another. The playful prattle of a little child, the quiet prayer, the sweet memories of long years that are past, are others. The hopes of the years to come, being talked over, offer the highest joys this side of heaven. O man, do not think that associating with men of the world offers to you the acme of pleasure. If you cannot find any enjoyment in the fellowship of Christian people, then the sooner by the grace of God you kill your diseased spiritual appetite the better for your own enjoyment and the better for your life.

That you can govern your love for the good and the holy and for the best or the indifferent was illustrated to me by the experience of a lady member of my church who is a very fine musician. Her brother was a happy and lucky young man who seemed to have no ear for good music. Every popular air, every music hall jingle, every negro melody that had a jolly ring to it, he knew by heart. All the noted college songs he could sing until the very rafters echoed. But the deeper, sweeter, holier calls of the great musical masters fell unheeded upon his dull ears. This brother, who was a fine athlete, had his leg broken and was brought home from college and had to lie in bed for about six weeks. During those days his sister had to continually practice for a difficult performance which she was about to give before a musical society of the city. At last the first the brother protested. He wanted to hear her play some of the popular airs. But as the language of the musical masters kept pouring their melodies into his mind and heart through the vestibule of his ear there was born in his soul a love for the truly great music. The old songs which he once loved he now despises. The truly beautiful music he once despised he now he lives. My friends, if you do not love the society of Christian people there is something wrong in your life. You have a diseased spiritual appetite. The sooner you go with the truly consecrated people the sooner you will learn to love their society. Do not make the prayer of my text, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation," unless by constant association with Christian people you do all in your power to develop that spiritual joy.

But in order to fully grasp the beauty of the psalmist's prayer you must remember that it is given with the absolute knowledge that in his own strength he was nothing, but that in God's strength he could be everything. David at this time was standing under the shadows of his past sins. God had blessed him again and again, yet just after these many manifestations of the love of God he had fallen back into sin because he had depended upon his own strength. Thus David says, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation and uphold me by thy free spirit." That means in plain English, "Oh, God, bring me back to thy loving grace, cleanse me from sin and then by thy power do not let me again wallow in the quagmires and the bogs and the filth of evil."

It is only by doubting and continuing to distrust our own strength that we are led to rely entirely upon God's protection and care. I would have us by our dependence on God when we make this prayer exactly as the little adopted daughter of a dear friend of mine feels toward her father. Some months ago this little girl was in a foundling institution in one of our large cities. By this institution she was sent west and put into a low Mexican's home of ignorance and filth. There my friend found her and said: "She shall not remain here. She shall come and be my daughter and live in my home." She took her west. Then he and his wife washed the little girl and put clean clothes upon her and put her into a clean, white bed. They surrounded her with all that wealth and love could give. Yet, though that little girl is now only about two and one-half years old, she loves its continual terror of being taken back to her past surroundings. Every night before she goes to bed she calls her foster father to her side or crawls up into his lap and puts her little arms about his neck and says, "Papa, you won't let them come and take baby away, will you?" Sometimes she awakes at night and calls and asks the same question, "You won't let them take baby away, will you?" And the great, strong man, with tears in his eyes, says: "No, baby; no, daughter! I will not let them come and take you away from me and mamma. Go to sleep now; papa will keep you safely by his side!" So David, as a heartbroken sinner, just reaches up and puts his arms up in plea to God and says: "Oh, Father, keep me. Don't let me go back to sin as I have done in the past. Keep me, Lord. Keep me in the power of thy love." Have you not, oh, man, sinned after God has restored to you again and again the joy of salvation? Can you not say to him now: "Keep me, Lord. Keep me, my Father. Keep me."

Thus, my friends, because you have again and again come to Christ and asked of him the joy of salvation and then fallen away do not let your broken resolutions keep you away from the Saviour to-day. First get an alms sheet. Say, "O God, forgive." Then make a prayer, an earnest prayer, which will be a confession, a request for forgiveness, noon and night. Let this be your prayer: "O God, keep me, keep me! O Lord, keep me with thy free spirit. O God will keep you, brother. He will keep you under the shadow of his wings. Will you make the prayer of my text now? Will you continue to make the earnest prayer: "Uphold me with thy free spirit," until at last he delivers you forever from all sinful temptations at the great white throne of heaven?

Sir Redvers Buller and His Tenant.

One of the bravest of our generals is trustee of the property on the estate, near the Village of Newton St. Cyres. On going over the estate on a recent occasion, he came in contact with a tenant who failed to recognize him, and who was somewhat brusque in his manner. On the identity of the general, he requested him to visit his house some little distance away, where his wife would attend him some dilapidations that urgently required attention. On reaching the premises, Buller was ushered into the female occupant, who invited him to enter. She showed him over the premises, pointed out the requirements and waxed wroth because the visitor did not understand or take in her wishes. Then she threatened that if she could not get the work done she would go and see "Mr. Buller" about it. Grasping the situation, the general inquired if she would know "Mr. Buller" if she saw him. She declared she should, as she had his likeness hanging up in her house. After considerable mutual good-natured banter on the woman who her visitor was, and the latter's promise to call at the house. She was then full of apologies, but the general assured her she had done nothing to offend, and left her to her own reflections, assuring her that the necessary wants should receive attention.

Monkeys Have a Lesson.

Monkeys are more than pets in some parts of the world. At Malabar, India, they are taught to work and have practically made themselves almost indispensable in the homes of the wealthy. The monkey's usefulness is one of the secrets known as the langur. It is very warm in Malabar, and there is a fan called the punka, which used to be hung from the ceiling. The punka was a slave to work each punka, but now every punka in Malabar is worked by a monkey. It was an English officer who conceived the idea of training the langur work in that manner. The fan is a movable frame, covered with canvas, and is operated by a cord. The motion is caused by pulling a cord. The officer tied the hands of the langur to one of the cords and then by means of another cord put the machine in motion. Of course the monkey's hand went up and down, and the animal understood what kind of a game was being played. Then the officer patted its head and fed it with candy till soon one langur thought it fine fun to "work" the punka. The experiment was successful, and now thousands of monkeys are in harness.—Exchange.

ARDEN.

We are now able to place our feet on terra firma once more, after an elevation of from three to five feet, for the past two weeks, owing to the flood.

The lakes are breaking up and the boys have left for the river.

Mr. Egerton Thornton, General Merchant and postmaster, is erecting a large store and dwelling house combined. The building is on front street between the hotel and J. W. Brown's harness shop.

At Mr. Hunt's, three miles west of Arden, on Wednesday evening, 5th inst., Miss Edge Scott, niece of David Scott, was united in marriage to Miss Edith Thompson, niece of Mr. and Mrs. Hunt. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. C. Huffman.

Several bodies will be removed from the wood this week and buried. Mason Boomhower will be placed in the Arden Cemetery. Tuttle Hawley in Methodist Church cemetery. Minnie Wood in Mt. Hope cemetery, while the remains of Mrs. Detlor will be taken to Newburgh, and placed beside her husband.

In a paper which was presented to the Luzerne County, Pa., Medical Society, Dr. Wainwright, of Scranton, declares that workers in the anthracite mines makes a man practically immune from tuberculosis. He finds that the atmosphere being dust does not flourish in the mine air and that coal dust may protect the lungs by its presence from tubercle bacilli growth and thus repelling the bacilli.

Health in Spring.

NATURE NEEDS ASSISTANCE IN MAKING NEW HEALTH-GIVING BLOOD.

Spring is the season when your system needs toning up. In the spring you must have new blood just as the trees must have new sap. Nature demands it. Without new blood you will feel weak and languid; you may have twinges of rheumatism, or neuralgia, accumulated headaches, a variable appetite, pimples or eruptions of the skin, or a pale, pasty complexion. These are certain signs that the blood is out of order. The only sure way to get new blood and fresh energy is to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They actually make new, rich blood—that is why they are the greatest spring tonic in the world. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills clear the skin, drive out disease, and make tired, depressed men and women bright, active and strong. Mr. Neil B. McDonald, Eatmere, N. S., says: "It gives me great satisfaction to state that I have found Dr. Williams' Pink Pills all that is claimed for them. I was completely run down, my appetite was poor and I suffered much from severe headaches. Doctors' medicine did not give me the needed relief, so I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I used only a few boxes when my former health returned, and now I feel like a new man."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are not only the best spring tonic, but are a sure cure for all troubles due to poor blood or shattered nerves. That is why they cure headaches and backache, rheumatism, anaemia, kidney and liver troubles, and the special secret ailments of women and growing girls. But you must get the genuine, with the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," printed on the wrapper around each box. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Jewish Statistics.

According to a rough census made by different societies in Switzerland, there are 19,000,000 Jews in the world. Of these it is figured that the United States has 1,000,000; Europe 10,000,000 and countries outside of Europe 8,000,000. Professor Haman gives this distribution of the Jews in Europe: Russia, 6,000,000; Austria-Hungary, 1,800,000; Germany, 568,000; Roumania, 300,000; Great Britain, 200,000; Turkey, 120,000; Holland, 97,000; France, 77,000; Italy, 37,000; Servia, 5,000; Switzerland, 12,000; Denmark, 4,000; Belgium, 3,000; Spain, 2,500, and Portugal, only 300.

Paris Policeman Robbed.

So occupied are the Paris police in pocketing the surprise of the public that they apparently have no time to look after their own. Recently a sack containing 10,000 francs, destined for the payment of salaries in the Louvre, was stolen from the police station of the Eleventh arondissement under the very noses of its guardians, and no trace of the thieves has been discovered.—Paris Messenger.

Cut Both Ways.

Some years ago a law was passed in England requiring imported goods to be marked "Made in France," "Made in Germany," etc. At many of these goods are of excellent quality, it has been found that the law actually benefits the foreign makers, and an effort is accordingly being made to have it changed so that goods from the continent shall have merely a label marking them as "Imported."

A Dangerous Habit.

Gladstone's Physician Gives Warning Against a Growing American Custom.

The growing habit amongst Americans of taking a small tablet or some other so-called digestive after eating a hearty meal, is something that Sir Andrew Clarke, Mr. Gladstone's physician advises strongly against, saying, "It is absolutely dangerous to take into the stomach remedies which are popularly supposed to aid in the digestion of food."

There is a strong tendency in the science of medicine that can perform the work of the human stomach. Drugs do not cause digest the food. They simply decompose it. What can be more revolting or distressing than to think of taking something into the stomach that is going to turn the good food you have eaten into a mass of corruption.

The only way to overcome indigestion and its evil effects is to remove the cause. Indigestion and inflammation from the stomach, liver and intestines, and Mi-o-na is the only agent known that will do this.

When a Mi-o-na tablet is taken before each meal every trace of irritation and inflammation is removed from the stomach and digestive system. These organs will extract from the food all that goes to make good, rich blood, firm muscle, steady nerves and a sound healthy body. If you suffer with headaches, indigestion, flatulency, spots before the eyes, dizziness, palpitation of the heart, sleeplessness, or any stomach trouble, get a fifty cent box of Mi-o-na from Wallace's Red Cross Drug Store, one of our most reliable druggists, whose faith in the remedy is shown by his offer to return the money if Mi-o-na does not give complete satisfaction.

The best Soap point at The Red Cross Drug Store. It frees hands and wears well. T. H. Wallace.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS SICK?

Let your morning urine stand for 24 hours in a glass or vessel, and then if it is milky or cloudy, or contains a reddish brick-dust sediment, or if particles or germs float about in it, your kidneys are diseased. If the kidneys are well they filter just so much blood, but if they are sick or weak from any cause, they leave the poison in the blood, and this poison affects the entire system.

It is natural to pass urine three times a day, but many who regard themselves as healthy are obliged to pass water six to ten times daily and are obliged to get up frequently during the night. They have sick kidneys and bladder and don't know it. Smith's Buchu Lithia Pills cure Rheumatism and all Kidney and Bladder diseases, and make new, rich blood.

We will send you a generous sample post paid Free, together with our large book on the above mentioned diseases. Address, W. H. Smith & Co. Sts. St. James Street, Montreal, Canada.

So popular is Dickie's Anti-Consumptive Syrup as a medicine in the treatment of colds and coughs or ailments of the throat, due to exposure, hoarseness, or sudden changes of temperature, that druggists and all dealers in patent medicines keep supplies on hand to meet the demand. It is pleasant to take, and the use of it guarantees freedom from throat and lung diseases.

Smith—Let me see, didn't you invent a sanitary cattle car some years ago?

Jones—Yes.

Smith—Did you succeed in making anything out of it?

Jones—No; the railroads refused to take any stock in it.

It Is An Elixir of Life.—Some forgotten time, men have been seeking for the Elixir of Life, which tradition says once existed. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is an Elixir, before which pain cannot live. It is made up of six essential oils, carefully blended so that their curative properties are concentrated in it. It has no equal in the treatment of lumbago, rheumatism and all bodily pains.

"Jatez," growled old man Hardfyst, "what in tarnation are you carryin' that there over outdoors an' not be doin' nothin'?"

"Just want to see the difference in the temperature, pa," explained Jakez.

"Well, you let it alone. Keep the mercury runnin' up an' down in the tube until I find out how the dickens to measure 'it be worm out, an' there'll be 25 cents throwed away."

Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is pleasant to take; sure and effectual in destroying worms. Many have tried it with best results.

"Edith!" said the girl's mother, "why did Mr. Huggard stay so late last night?"

"I don't know," replied the girl, blushing.

"I guess the poor fellow didn't have time to go," said the little boy of the brother. "I heard Edith tell him they were all going to church on the next minute she'd say. Now you stop."

The Demon, Dyspepsia—In olden times it was a popular belief that demons moved invisibly through the ambient air seeking for victims on whom and trouble them. At the present day the demon, dyspepsia, is at large in the same way, seeking habitation in those who by careless or unwise living invite him. And once he enters a man it is difficult to dislodge him. Many things himself so possessed should that a valiant friend to do battle for him with the unseen foe is Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are ever ready for the trial.

Clara—You don't mean to say that at fifty he is making love to you. Isn't that rather young for an old man?

Maud—Yes. But he is the most precocious old man I have ever met.

"A Magic Pill—Dyspepsia is a foe with which men are constantly grappling that cannot exterminate," advised, and to all appearances vanquished, in some instances, only to appear in other direction. In many the digestive apparatus is as delicate as the mechanism of a watch or scientific instrument, in which even a breath of air will make a variation. With such persons the orders of the stomach ensue from the most trivial causes and cause much suffering. To these Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are recommended as a mild and sure.

Flannery—Phwat's the use o' choppin down a tree?

Finnery, resting on his axe—Phwy not?

Flannery—Shure, ye'll only have to chop it up agin.

Dashaway—I'm afraid I'll never get my ring back from that Piper girl, Cleveland—Why, I thought she was a peach.

Dashaway—She is—clingstone variety

"Say, I'm going to propose to Eleanor to-night. How shall I do it? Did you get down on your knees when you proposed to Mrs. S.?"

"No, my dog, I didn't. She was on them."

"Why do you feel that your client will lose his case? Have you exhausted every means in your disposal to—"

"No; but I've exhausted all the means at his disposal."

Small Boy, just home from school—Mamma, Miss Simpson says I'm descended from a monkey.

His Mother, glancing severely at her Husband—No! my child, darling.

Hobo—I don't mine going to jail, Judge, but them words, "Hard labor," grate on my ear.

Judge—We can easily fix that, I will give you two years in the penitentiary at physical culture.

"I bet I get into more trouble than any man in this State," volunteered the young fellow who was being ordered a Scotch highball. "Nothing in the trouble line overlooks me. Why, I'd be afraid to marry——"

"What, ain't you married?" ejaculated the red-nosed elderly party who was hovering over the cocktail lunch. "Boy, you don't know what trouble is."

Fred Membery's Letter.

Chicago, Ill., April 3d, '05.

Dear Beaver,—This is my third letter to you since I came here on the 18th March, and every day since that time has been like sunny June with us down at the farm. The weather is perfectly lovely—the parks all covered with a carpet of green, the grass being from two to three inches high, and the lawn mowers will soon be running. The trees are beginning to leaf out and by the time this appears in print they will be full fledged. Birds of the park, the crowds that are in the parks already are wonderful to behold, together with fine horses and carriages in the boulevards and private automobiles by the scores.

Yesterday, the 2d of April, I went in company with a lady, to hear Rev. Frank W. Gunsolus preach in the Central church—the auditorium Annex Hotel, on Michigan Avenue. This Central church, so called, is nothing more or less than the theatrical apartment of the Auditorium Annex Hotel, which is allowed to be used for Divine worship on Sunday by the above minister—on week days the theatre closes. It is the finest of the finest. Plush cushions stuffed all over it, with electric lights as thick from the ceiling as the stars in the sky; no windows, as the matinee in the afternoon would not allow them. We preached from the gallery to his choir, numbering a hundred, in a circle behind him. This room or parlor, will seat five thousand people, and not another one could have been seated comfortably yesterday, consequently, the congregation that attended yesterday must have numbered five thousand people, to hear this man. And they told me, those that attended, that it was the same every Sunday. During the whole of the service, unless when the organ and singing was on, one could have heard a pin drop, so attentive were they to hear his sermon—the best that I ever heard. Can he be a relative of the late Chas. and Joseph Gunsolus, of Lennox, Canada?

The contribution boxes were numerous and passed round quickly as in a small country church, but rather more put in them. The one I passed contained sums of money, all the way from 5c nickles to bank bills, so that if 5,000 people put in 5,000 nickles it would be $250.00; but I would not be surprised if some one had told me that $1000 had been collected here amongst the millionaires, and perhaps more. The singing was joined in by the whole congregation, and imagine what music, with an organ, 5,000 voices would make. This is the largest congregation of any church in Chicago. I printed the dark side of the picture, of murders, thieves and vagabonds, two years ago, when here, and now I show you the other side of the picture, with 5,000 Christians in one congregation, if you will count me in it. The minister asked all present to hand their leaflet, the program of the services, to some one else, of which there must have been 5,000 copies—which if all did so, of course of them, 5,000 more would have their attention called to what had just passed, and get ready for the coming Sunday. I will do as I was requested and hand it to some one else and that, some one is generally Mr. Editor, and I hope most sincerely to see you there next Sunday, and I could be better pleased to see such a friend. I herewith enclose it with the letter.

The elevated cars are the proper way of travelling. Here you see a train of five or six cars, which would seat from 80 to 100 persons, each passing every minute from 6 to 8 a.m., crowded to the utmost for the city with the clerks to take their places at 8 a.m. Again, in the evening from 5.30 to 7.30, bringing them home for 5 cts. each way, a distance of thirteen miles from starting to the central part of the city. Thus there would be with an average of eighty to the car and five cars to the train, and a train arriving and arrive and depart every twenty-four hours from the various depots of the city, from all parts of the continent. Verily this is a great city, and must be seen to comprehend it.

It is just two days since yesterday the 2d of April, only, it happened on Thursday instead of Sunday, that I saw President Roosevelt and suite enter the Auditorium Annex Hotel—Which sight was the best for me than yesterday? Well, I am satisfied for seeing both.

I will just mention that I have not seen a person that showed any sign of drink since I came here, but I am not tasted any myself, and will not, no matter how long I stay. I was perfectly disgusted with this habit while in Toronto. I was there seven weeks and during that time I never saw so much beer-guzzling in all my life. Men and women, dizzy headed and tumbling over everywhere, all the time. It was enough to sicken a man from ever smelling of the cork again. I have been in some of the saloons here through sheer curiosity. They are nearly all free lunch counters and I noticed than preference having a couple of glasses of beer and then pass over to the lunch counter, on which there is everything to excite the appetite, and they eat till they are satisfied and pass out sober, giving room for many more just like them. They say in Canada that free lunch counters are not drinking. I say through personal knowledge, that they do not. The beer works on the food and aids digestion, and makes rich blood, whereas if no food is taken, it works on the nerves of the stomach and clogs the liver, and makes them stupid and dizzy, and then they are told to get out as they don't seem to know how to behave themselves. I saw one man while in Toronto at the supper table so stupid with this beer that he began eating the flowers on the table and thought that they were celery. The waiter had to remove them from the table to get them out of his reach. He is no worse than any other man made by d—— fool of by drink, and the only reasonwhy that liquor dealers won't put up lunches and a soda fascnati is that they can't get them drunk so quick and get their money and kick them out as without it.

Well, Mr. Editor, I fear I am trespassing on your space, and will close this letter.

THE ILLS OF THE AGED.

Mrs. Stacy, of Hamilton, tells how they may be Lessened.

Mrs. Elizabeth Stacy, of 172 Hunter Street West, Hamilton, says:—

"I was very much troubled with Headache, Dizziness and Constipation. I am in my eighty-first year, and find Parmelee's Anti-Pill just what I need, and faint that I could hardly keep from falling.

Since using Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill I am very much better; in fact, I may say I am very much improved to what I was before using Anti-Pill. I am so thankful for the improvement at my advanced age that I think I should write and tell you about it. I will always recommend Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill since it has done so much for me."

Anti-Pill is positively the best medicine for aged men and women.

In Memoriam.

MRS. W. S. WAGAR, TAMWORTH.

"Hushaby! Hushaby!
Who shall make a lullaby?
Who shall sing a quiet song our weary eyes to close?
Grief and pain and fretfulness,—
Oh, to find forgetfulness!
Oh, to feel again the charm the tired baby knows!

"Hushaby! Hushaby!
Beautiful it is to die;
The turning of the silent world shall be your cradle swing.
Oh, full sweet and motherly,
Death shall lift her voice for thee!
God hath taught her from His heart a lullaby to sing."

—Annie C. Heustis.

Robed, by her own request, in her wedding gown, Mrs. Stanley Wagar, a bride of six short months ago, was borne last Wednesday to the Methodist church in Tamworth, where in the presence of an overflowing and sympathetic congregation, the funeral services were conducted by Rev. W. H. Adams, assisted by Revds. J. K. Henry and R. Allin. Never actually robust, the past winter proved very trying to her constitution; and it became too evident as the weeks wore away, that the particular disease, of which she had long been fearful, had fastened itself upon her. Remorselessly it did its work, and the almost insupportable physical weakness that was induced told too plainly that neither recovery nor respite could be expected. By extreme old age death is often welcomed, but life is sweet at twenty-five, and amid all the delightful associations of her new and beautiful home, Mrs. Wagar found much to live for. Until almost the last she never intimated that she was ready to give up the fight for life, and none can ever tell what it cost her in the end to confess that she "did not think she would see Easter." At length, however, in her voluntary submission to the Divine will, she found herself appropriate the words of Charlotte Elliott, with whose sweet spirit she had always had much in common:

"Should pining sickness waste away
My life in premature decay,
My Father, still I strive to say,
"Thy will be done."

Mrs. Wagar, who, as Miss Rhoda Marlin, had a place in the church choir, and in the League and Sunday School, will be much missed. A thoroughly trained singer, who sang "with the spirit and with the understanding also," it will be many a long day before the echoes of some of her favorite Sunday evening hymns fade away. Endowed with high principle and fine feeling, she put alike soul and intelligence and consecration into her work, and her labor has obviously not been in vain. On the last Sunday afternoon of her life, a few choice friends gathered with her to participate in the communion service, which was singularly beautiful and impressive. As they retired she called her farewell upon them, and within a few hours passed calmly into the Paradise of God.

"Hush! blessed are the dead
In Jesus' arms at rest,
And lean their weary head
Forever on His breast.

O beatific sight!
No darkling veil between,
They see the light of light
Whom here they loved unseen.

Ours only are the tears,
Who weep around their tomb
The light of bygone years,
And shadowing fears to come."

Canon McAlpine recently delivered an address to Irish unemployed at Clifden, County Galway, declaring that people would be fools to starve "so long as fat sheep were grazing on the plain." A few nights afterwards a humorist stole all his neighbour's turkeys and left a note thanking him for the hint.

We Offer $1,000

For a Disease Germ That Liquozone Can't Kill.

On every bottle of Liquozone we offer $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. We do this to assure you that Liquozone does kill germs.

And it is the only way known to kill germs in the body without killing the tissues, too. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Medicine is almost helpless in any germ disease. It is the fact which gives Liquozone its worth to humanity; a worth so great that, after testing the product for two years, through physicians and hospitals, we paid $100,000 for the American rights. And we have spent over one million dollars, in one year, to buy the first bottle and give it free to each sick one who would try it.

Acts Like Oxygen.

Liquozone is not made by compounding drugs, nor is there any alcohol in it. Its virtues are derived solely from gas—largely oxygen gas—by a process requiring immense apparatus and 14 days' time. This process has, for more than 20 years, been the constant subject of scientific and chemical research.

The result is a liquid that does what oxygen does. It is a nerve food and blood food—the most helpful thing in the world to you. Its effects are exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying. Yet it is an absolutely certain germicide. The reason is that germs are vegetables; and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen—kills only vegetable matter.

Liquozone goes into the stomach, into the bowels and into the blood, to go wherever the blood goes. No germ can escape it and none can resist it. The results are inevitable, for a germ disease must end when the germs are killed. Then Liquozone, acting as a wonderful tonic, quickly restores a condition of perfect health. Diseases which have resisted medicine for years yield at once to Liquozone, and it cures diseases which medicine never cures. Half the people you meet—wherever you are—can tell you of cures that were made by it.

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone attacks the germs, wherever they are. And when the germs which cause a disease are destroyed, the disease must end, and forever. That is inevitable.

SWALLOWED BILL TO SAVE SEATS.

Strong Argument in Liberals' Says Member for Lennox.

Ottawa, April 5—The debate on the Autonomy Bill was resumed at this afternoon's session by Mr. Wilson (Lennox) said Manitoba was one of the old provinces, but could not exercise the weight it should as long as it remained like a little postage stamp on the map. The bill did not make it any easier to have Separate schools than it would have been without it. Separate schools were a matter of great success. There were only about a dozen of them now in the North-West and therefore there was practically no need for the proposed legislation. Mr. Scott had claimed that there was practically no difference between the Separate and Public schools. Mr. Turriff, however, had pointed out one difference, and that was in their books. His own idea was that all children should attend schools in common and mix with each other, one another. The present bill was the most contentious one that had been introduced to Parliament during his time in it. It had caused wide spread agitation. But the agitation had only just commenced. Meetings would be held all over the Dominion before the end of July, especially in Toronto, where many of those present were Liberals. One of these was Mr. Willison, a former great admirer of Sir Wilfrid, who had written an account of h life. Now he would have to write another volume. (Conservative applause).

Mr Willison had joined in condemning the present course of the Government. The Toronto Saturday Night, which was also quite an admirer of Sir Wilfrid, had turned against him on the autonomy measure. The agitation, in fact, was only commencing. Meetings would be held all over the Dominion. He had already been held in Toronto, where many of those present were Liberals. One of these was Mr. Willison, a former great admirer of Sir Wilfrid, who had written an account of h life. Now he would have to write another volume. (Conservative applause).

end of the room. George mechanically took up the newspaper. His eyes were caught by a new heading, "Strange Affair In an Essex Church," and by the words "destruction of the registers." Just as he was about to glance over the article, he thinking what it meant to him, Bawdsey returned with the wine and two glasses. He uttered an exclamation of dismay when he saw the paper in George's hand.

"Hang it, I never meant you to see that!" he said.

"Why not?" replied George. "Is it this news about a lady trying to tear the registers?" He started and looked at Bawdsey, who was uneasy and pale. "It's false!" he added.

"No, and yet—why should you not know? I believe it is Lola, though no name is mentioned."

George picked up the paper again and read rapidly. No name was mentioned, as it said that the strange lady who had been interviewed refused to give any name. It seemed that she went to Wargrove church and asked to see the registers for a certain year—the registers of marriage. The sexton took the fee and showed the books. Then it appeared that the strange lady searched for an hour. The sexton left the vestry for a few minutes. When he returned he saw that she had torn a page out of the book. Being taken by surprise, she had tried to conceal her theft, but the sexton seized her, refused to give her up, and called for assistance. The end of it was that the strange lady—who was described as having a foreign air—was arrested and placed in prison. "It is Lola!" said George breathlessly.

"Yes," assented Bawdsey, also pale. "She evidently tried to destroy the evidence of your mother's marriage."

George gave a cry. "Wargrove," he said, "Wargrove in Essex. It was in the parish church that the marriage took place. And Lola knew—Lola knew!" He paused. The eyes of the two men met.

CHAPTER XX.

It was 4 o'clock when George left Bawdsey. The two had spoken little of the newspaper paragraph which informed them of Lola's escapade. Although her name was not mentioned there was no doubt in the mind of Brendon that she was the culprit. The newspaper gave the year of the book when the sheet was torn, and that corresponded to the year when Percy Vane married—or had been supposed to marry—Rosina Lockwood. And this was the explanation of Lola's abhorrence from the church. She fled from the rebuke of Brendon, but had gone to do him an injury by destroying the evidence of his parents' marriage, which would be the meaning of her wild threat to Dorothy.

Bawdsey was much upset over the news. He would have fled immediately to Wargrove but some special business kept him in town. However, he purposed to go the next morning by the first train. But George was going that very day. Lola could not have known that his parents had been married at Wargrove without having seen Mrs. Jersey's confession wherein the fact was probably mentioned. Therefore she must have obtained the confession in some way. How she achieved the feat George could not conjecture. Then he thought of Lola's hot Spanish blood, of the stiletto—a peculiarly foreign weapon—and shuddered. It occurred to him that Lola herself must have stabbed the woman.

He found that a train left Liverpool street for Wargrove at ten minutes past 5 and that Wargrove was a tiny rural town which could be reached in an hour. Ever quick and expeditious in his movements, at the appointed time he was on his way down the country.

It was a dull journey. It seemed that the farmer town of Wargrove was the place where the train stopped, but old Wargrove was three miles distant, and it was there that the parish church was situated.

MORVEN SUGAR SOCIAL.

The sugar social which was held at Morven on the evening of April 12th was in everyway a success. The crowd was the largest that has attended these socials for years, and the receipts were larger in proportion, amounting to the sum of $62.00. The programme was also a very enjoyable and an entertaining one; in it the music was furnished by the Newburgh choir. Newburgh is certainly to be congratulated in having so talented a choir. Also Mr. F. G. Millar pleased the audience with a number of violin solos, and Mr. W. Shorey gave two readings that were highly appreciated. Rev. J. F. Mears made a very pleasing and instructive address. Owing to the unavoidable absence of Dr. Vrooman, the chair was occupied by the pastor. The refreshments were all that could be desired. Altogether the evening's entertainment was all that could be wished for. The committees did their work well, and the receipts were enough to clear the trustee board of all its indebtedness. The people of Morven are thankful to their many friends who patronized their social.

FIRE AT MARLBANK.

Marlbank, April 11th.—Fitzgerald's hotel was completely destroyed by fire between 1.30 and 2 o'clock this morning. The origin of the fire is unknown, but was noticed in the barn first and it soon spread to the kitchen and main part of the building. Fortunately there was little or no wind and this prevented the fire spreading to other houses. Had there been a northern wind, nothing could have prevented the whole village being burned down as there is no fire extinguishing apparatus in the village. The bucket brigade was useless. Last week the owner of the hotel offered to sell out for $6,000. The loss is partly covered by $2,000 insurance. Recently a local question has reached acute stages in Marlbank. The township by-law limits the licenses to three. Two of these are in Stoco and one the above hotel in Marlbank. There is now an application for another house to receive a license in Marlbank. The church took up the matter and are opposing, promoting a petition for no licenses. Probably the above barn out will greatly change the position of matters and Mr. Fitzgerald, who has supplied the wants of the travelling public and locality for years, will be backed up by public sympathy and encouraged to build a first-class up-to-date brick hotel which is much needed in Marlbank.

GUGLIELMO MARCONI
The Father of Wireless Telegraphy

This is the age of the elimination of the essentials. We have horseless carriages, trackless trolleys, inkless printing, loveless marriages, alcoholless wine, clockless without hands, apples without seeds, and, greatest of all, telegraphless without wires. Marconi, who succeeded in performing this miracle of science which has been the dream of electrical experimenters since 1746, is a young Italian, born at Bologna and not yet thirty years old. His father is an Italian landed proprietor and his mother is the daughter of James Jameson, the famous Irish whiskey distiller.

At eight years of age Guglielmo showed the first faint buds of promise of inventive genius; at twelve his tutor attempted to rob him of one of his devices; at sixteen he was absorbed in chemistry, electrical and mathematical problems; and at twenty he was almost taxing the faith and love of his mother with the seemingly insane proposition of attempting to telegraph without wires, through hills and forests, across streams and over fields.

When he was twenty-one he went to England and somehow managed to interest Sir William Preece, engineer of the British telegraph system, sufficiently to secure his co-operation. When Marconi successfully sending a message two miles—a success sufficient to irritate him by the golden visions of greater distances yet to master—he was like Moses viewing the Promised Land from the mountain top. It seemed impossible for him to extend his powers further and he was discouraged almost to despair, but stuck loyally to the problem until the seventeen-year mark of conquered distance rose to one hundred and twenty-five miles.

On December 13, 1901, the scientific world was astounded by the news that Marconi had succeeded in talking to England from Newfoundland across 2,000 miles of air and water. There was a smile of complaisant toleration for the inventor who imagined he had done this, the smile of one who does not wish to consume comfort from the empty happiness of a pleasant dream. But soon it was science that awoke to the realization of the marvel and the next morning newspaper printed from news carried to the vessel by "marconigrams" and the world was in a ferment. The breakfast table in midocean, proves anew the wonder that grows greater as its field broadens and develops. Marconi was the first to send a recorded message through space by electromagnetic waves (in 1894); the first to telegraph from a moving ship (in 1897), and the first to speed a wireless message across the Atlantic.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by W. G. Mack, at the Department of Agriculture.

BURST BUOY.

CAUSED DEATH AND DISASTER.

Kingston Whig, 18th April.

During the filling of buoys for service on lake and river, an explosion of one of them startled the city about noon to-day and caused death. The scene of the terrible accident was at the government steamer Scout, and the government steamer Scout, and the buoys were filled on Tuesday. The explosion was terrific; sharp and heavy in its effects. People who rushed to the windows along the water front saw a volume of yellowish smoke, like a huge balloon, sailing in an easterly direction, and quickly divided that it was from there the explosion occurred. Then the fire alarm sounded and the people hastened to find the government steamer Scout, and the cause of the terrible accident was at once apparent. Mangled and burned flesh. The body of Malcolm Fred Mullen, of Wellington, was found thirty feet from the boat, the upper part of the body with singed hair, and about and his clothing in shreds; the lower body was blackened, torn and bleeding, and was also quite unrecognizable. Capt. Allison, of Morrisburg, was seen a few feet away in a dazed condition. He was hurried to the city and died before morning. The crew has so far been accounted for:

DEAD.

Fred. Mullen, Wellington.
Capt. Allison, Morrisburg.
Capt. Gallivan, Morrisburg.
Capt. Gillard, Montebello.

SHOCKED AND SLIGHTLY INJURED
Clifford Teaster, Cornwall, blown into the water; Samuel Arkell, Prescott; Chas. Burnett, Farren's Point, and Wilfred Winter, Kingston boy, who was on the wharf.

WHAT WAS THE CAUSE.

The cause of the accident is attributed to too much gasoline being put in the buoys. This has not been proven, but that is the generally accepted opinion among those who know about explosives. The statement made is that there was not sufficient air in the buoys to allow the gas to escape. A government investigation will doubtless follow.

CAPT. AUGUSTUS' STORY.

Capt. Webster Augustus, mariner inspector of Indian Lights, was on the dry dock premises at the time of the explosion. He had been talking to Capt Allison and Fred. Mullen, standing on the dock at which the Scout was lying. He was walk only a few feet away because a man further up the dock, and had not been gone a minute, when he heard the report, and was staggered by the concussion. He looked around, and he saw nothing of the explosion or of the boat. He looked again, and after he saw where the trouble was, and he looked to the end of the wharf where he found the one body decapitated, and the other badly injured. According to his story there were two large gas buoys on the end of the wharf which were being filled at the time of the explosion. Augustus claims that the explosion occurred in the buoy which had been charged, and that the buoy which was being filled at the time of the explosion, and he considers that there was no danger from atoms. Another man was mixing the chemicals which produced the gas that was generated, although Capt. Augustus did not know his name.

The steamer Reindeer arrived in the harbor on Saturday afternoon, and left on Tuesday on her regular trip to Picton and down the bay as far as Conway, returning to Adolphustown for the night, therefore not yet being free of ice. The patrons of this tidy little steamer will hardly recognize her this season. She has been strengthened along the bottom of her hull with heavy oak planks running the length of the boat, entirely retimed and painted throughout, three new windows and other improvements. The cabin and cook's galley have also been remodelled and changed.

The tug Rescue, of Deseronto, was a caller at the harbor here on Saturday, and left in the afternoon, having in tow the schooner Kate Eccles and the sloop Laura D. The former went to Deseronto to load lumber for Oswego, and the latter took a load of grain from Napanee to Kingston.

—o—

Messrs. Geo. Gibbard, H. M. P. Deroche and Chas. Cleall have purchased the trim little sailing yacht "Arrow" from Frank Madole, and will put in their leisure moments this summer on the water.

—o—

Mr. E. J. Roy has completed his commodious and comfortable 20-foot steam launch, and during the last week has been working on during the winter. The boat is built of cedar with cedar lining, and is a nice model. The stern is a compromise between a torpedo and an ordinary stern. The boat has a 28 in. beam, the deck is 3 feet wide, there is a neat brass rail fore and aft, and the chalks, cleats and flag pole sockets are made of brass, all brass being nickle-plated an dajustable canopy top supported by brass standards at each end affords protection from the sun and rain. The craft will accommodate twelve persons comfortably, and instead of ordinary seats there are high back chairs on swinging brackets, an upholstered seat across stern and a couch. Underneath machinery, gasoline fuel for generating steam, the engine is three-horse power, and the boiler nearly five horse. The latter is only 2 feet in diameter and containes 326 ½-inch copper tubes 13 inches long. The work throughout was done at the Rock Drill Works by E. J. Roy, and is certainly a credit to him. He is also building a boat house at the foot of West street for his new launch.

—o—

Mr. R. B. Shipman has also built a new 26-ft. gasoline launch for his own use this coming season. This boat is somewhat longer than Mr. Roy's, and has six foot beam. Like Smith and Spencer's it also has a topside store and with the four-horse power gasoline engine that Mr. Shipman is putting in, for new model ought to show some speed. The boat has been christened "Clarke," and will be launched on Tuesday afternoon. A trial run up the river will be duly satisfactory. About fifteen persons can be comfortably seated.

—o—

Messrs. Robert Smith and D. W. Spencer have been putting in their evenings at the vacant store next to Mr. A. Vanluven's grocery, where they have been building a steam launch. Plenty of visitors have stopped to inspect and look on, and it is generally agreed that the boat is a fine model for speed. The craft is 25-ft. keel, 28-ft. with 4 ft. beam, is built of pine, and has a nice lifting torpedo stern. She is equipped with a three-horse power boiler, and a one horse power engine. We understand that all of the engine does not prove sufficient, it will be supplemented with a more powerful one.

—o—

It has been suggested that a physiog process be given on the river on the evening of the 24th May by the boats and launches owned by the town. The steam yachts and sail boats could be nicely decorated and lighted, and would be a novelty to our citizens, as an affair of this kind has not taken place here in years.

TERRIBLE BACK PAINS.

They fairly agonize you. Something powerful and penetrating is needed. Doctors advise nothing so swift to relieve as Nerviline. For strong, penetrating liniment made to cure just such pains as yours, Nerviline is very good. Mrs. Christie Ed. about four times more powerful than ordinary liniments. Nerviline is worst cases Poison's Nerviline is extraordinarily good. All muscular and nerve fleas before it. Nearly fifty years in use—a good recommendation, surely.

OBITUARY

CHARLES G. YOUNG.

The subject of th's sketch was born in Boston, Mass., on Dec. 25th, 1809, and continued to reside there up to about eight years ago, when he engaged with Ringling Bros.' circus, and travelled with them over a large territory, with them at their winter quarters, Baraboo, he engaged with Mr. Young, of Lemen Bros.' circus, and was with them several years, also staying with them at their winter quarters, Baraboo. About one year ago he was an expert teams sr, handling three and four horse teams with the greatest ease and precision, and his services were highly appreciated by his employers. He remained with them until about July 22nd, 1905, when at Picton, Ontario, there was a fatal shooting affray, one man deliberately killing another. This seemed to startle Charlie, and he severed his connection with the Company at once, and on July 28th, entered the employ of Mr. Fred A. Perry, of Fredericksburgh, Ont., as a farm hand, and continued to be valued and trusty employee with Mr. Perry for eight months. He then went with Mr. John McAllister, of Richmond, remaining about four months, when he engaged with Mr. W. H. Cadman, of Canning and Centreline, 1904, he returned to stay with Mr. John McAllister, of Richmond. There he remained till February 4th, 1906, at which time his remains were found frozen in the snow. Deceased was an orphan, his mother and relatives were notified by telegram, and were present at the time of the sad occurrence, and on April 7th Mr. Perry left for Boston, with the remains and was met at the North Union station at 8 a.m., by deceased's brother and nephew, Mr. Fred. G. Hitchcock, a trusted and valuable manager of the American Express Company at above station, and a number of other relatives. The undertakers, Messrs. Lockhart Bros., took the remains to Mount Auburn cemetery, where they were interred in the family plot, which is beautifully situated on the main drive only a short distance from the main entrance, the services being held at the grave by the Rev. Mr. Walker, of Trinity Church, Bridge Episcopal church. Here rest in peace the remains of a kind-hearted, good natured and trusty person, whose sudden ending of life is deeply deplored by all who knew him.

The deceased has left behind him to cherish his memory a kind and loving mother and relatives, and friends in Canada, who will be grieved to learn of his sudden death. Deceased was also a member of the Knights of Pythias, Boston, Mass., and was buried with the honors of that order.

Mr. Dan Cousins has moved to Fifth Lake.

Mr. and Mrs. Melville McKim at Geo. Black's on Sunday.

Mrs. Wm. Kelly spent Sunday of last week at Mr. Irvine Oderkirk's.

Miss Addie Pressley, Northbrook, spent a few days at Mr. Geo. Black's, last week.

A serious accident happened to Mrs. John Kearns and two daughters and Master Willie Tyner. As they were returning home from Tamworth and were crossing the bridge, the water was about seven feet deep, but the road was up high. The horses stepped off far enough for the wagon to go down, and Miss Cicely Kearns was thrown out into the water. The rest jumped out on the road, where the water was not deep. Mrs. McKeown went to Cicely's assistance, but could not get to her, and she had to rescue the other daughter who ran in after her. Had the step of the wagon not caught on Cicely's clothing, she would undoubtedly have been drowned, as she was dragged under the water for a long distance and finally reached the road, which was ploughed until she was rescued. Her clothing was torn to pieces and they had a very narrow escape.

We are glad to welcome Miss M. B. Lewis again, as she has resumed her duties as teacher of our school.

Trip to the West Indies

Halifax, April 6th, 1905.

To the Editor of Napanee Beaver,
Napanee.

Sir,—As an old Napanee boy, tired and brought up in your town, I have ventured to think that a short description of my recent trip to the West Indies would be of interest to you many readers. Possibly, too, some of them may be contemplating an escape from the severe winters of our northern climate, and if so the account of my journey may be read with advantage as well as with curiosity.

Some twenty-five of us Canadians, forming a party, or perhaps I should say a family, started from Halifax on the 21st of February, on board the steamer "Orinoco", bound southward, passing several degrees below zero and 20 feet of snow. We had a record of differences of climate, but to realize what it means you must have had the experience. We had not been 48 hours at sea before we realized that we had left the change of temperature.—the balmy air of spring—as we entered the Gulf Stream. The further we went south the milder became the air and the warmer the sea. In four days we reached Bermuda, and here let us pause to describe it.

In my school books it is spoken of as a coral island. This is a misnomer. True you find the rain coral and other species here, but the foundation of the islands is volcanic, and the coral insects have had nothing to do with the original formation of the island. Long ages ago a mighty force drifted up by hurricanes, as heaps of snow are caused by the winds. These sand heaps became consolidated and formed the present dry land of Bermuda. There is very little soil here, and little there is has been washed into the valleys and forms the patches of which the farmers raise their onions and potatoes. Two acres comprising a half dozen little patches makes a large farm in Bermuda. But the patches are wonderfully fertile, and produce several crops in the run of the year. After the potatoes are dug the beans are planted, and the soil is never idle. The onion crop was ready for market on 1st April as we saw on our return voyage. The chief market is in New York, where the wealthy delight in green peas for the table, and can afford to pay from $2.40 per crate to $3 and $3.00 per barrel for early potatoes.

Bermuda is a most charming spot. Nature has done more beauties into a small compass than perhaps any other part of the globe. Every hill top has a splendid outlook. The Bermuda Islands number it is said 365, one for every day in the year. I fancy to make that number they must have sawed some of the islands in two. Speaking of the saw, they cut all the stone for their building with the saw. They even saw out the rock into slabs for the roofs of the house. So the houses, roofs and all, are of white stone, and look very picturesque among the hills, surrounded by green cedars, the deep blue and beautiful colors seem to depend on the clearness of the water and the sky overhead. To see Bermuda do not fail to visit the Devil's Hole, the Bermuda Caves, the Lady's Fingers," and other marine productions abound, and when you look at the coral caves you can see the angel fish and a vivid imagination can almost hear the song of the mermaids from the depths below.

Bermuda has a climate in winter just about like the summer climate of Napanee. So if any one of your readers desires to enjoy perpetual summer, let him or her about the 15th of November, take the steamer for Bermuda, and return there till about the 15th of April. The visitor will find the duplicate of his summer climate in the Bermuda winter, the season of flowers and sunshine, delightful sea breezes. The water always warm enough for a refreshing bath even in January. Bermuda climate suits Canadians the best. It is warm enough but not too warm, not contrast enough to produce lassitude. You bring the snow with you north to Bermuda, you retain it, and strengthen it with your sojourn, and come back refreshed and invigorated.

The people, both black and white, are kind and moral and hospitable. They visit Bermuda and come away with the feeling that you would love to return to it.

There is no drinking water here except what is gathered from the roofs of the houses, which are flat. Bermuda sends in the form of rain. In some ways this is a blessing in disguise. The rain water when taken from a stone roof white washed, and then filtered in the purest and best beverage that God has given to man. Besides when it passes through the system it is a tonic and excellent and carries off many impurities, it is a specific for many forms of kidney trouble. It cleanses the system so no other water can. I do not think I could recommend Bermuda for consumptives. There is too much moisture in the air and that moisture we were in with every visit that blows. But as a spot for complete rest and refreshment as a place where one could live comfortably and feel happy and contented and let the world wag, give me Bermuda.

But I must hurry on and not be tempted to tarry long in one spot, be it ever so enchanting. But before I pass on let me speak of the Oleanders. At home we grow a small shrub in a tub and think we have a wonderful prize. But imagine a land where the oleander is planted along every road-side, around every dwelling, across the fields to serve as wind breaks, and line fences between farms, and on an average of 30 ft. high, and then imagine these oleanders out in full bloom as they were when we left on 1st April. The white and red rose colored beauties forming a mass of color and compact a mass of bloom as to obscure the foliage. Then imagine the same species as one of the distinctive features of Bermuda.

The next stopping place is St. Kitts, over 925 miles south of Bermuda. St. Kitts is further from Halifax than the latter is from Halifax. This is evidently a voyage of immense distances. There is no harbor here as there was at Bermuda. The steamer comes to a stop in the roadstead of Basseterre, the capital of St. Kitts. Boats come out and those who desire to go on shore can pay a shilling and go. We went, visited the cathedral, put some pennies in the poor box and gathered some cocoanuts and almonds. The fresh cocoanut was inestimable. Here were fish of all sizes and of all colors, the names of many of which we could not remember. We noticed the flying-fish which is a near friend—but here he was without claws and his value was 2 shillings if you wanted to buy for eating. He was the mackerel, but he is twice the size here that he is in the north. Here, in Angel fish, its body flat, swims on edge, but has all the rainbow tints, and really the most beautiful fish that swims. There is a rock cod that will tip the scale at 50 lbs, and is said to be similar to the cod of the north. Here are groupers with big mouths and red lips. Parrot fish and cannibals of the deep. We had barely time to get on board when a boat manufactured the rum and the molasses, from the latter of which was passed round tall glasses and we accompanied back to the ship.

The next place of interest in Martinique, 200 miles south of St. Kitts, but we arrived in close and had a good view of it. It was a short time since clothid in ashes, St. Pierre, in ashes. The whole island is volcanic, and the cloud at the summit, a great gnarly of rain and fog, and the peak of Mount Pelais showed where it descended and enveloped the city. Now there was no trace of the city, only a black heap of ashes and scowling as if ready for another outburst. Already it is converted into stone.

Spontaneral produces 1 mos and lime juice. It is very rugged and rises abruptly from the sea.

Dominica charms you with its scenery, with its cliffs and mountains, magnificent. The soil is volcanic and wonderfully fertile. In the mountains there is a lake boiling away 200 feet above sea level. In the valleys there are boiling springs and pools.

St. Lucia is beautifully picturesque. One of the striking features of the place is to watch the black women loading coal on the steamers. They come in line and carry baskets on their heads containing 130 lbs. of coal, and the basket load into the hole, and all keeping well in line there is been wash-as by clock work. St. Lucia like Bermuda is an important military station and naval depot.

Barbados is also a volcanic 2000 ft. high, but it was not active when we visited it. The scenery here is exceedingly beautiful. Its ferns and flowers were a delight to the eye.

Barbados is an important British port, with a population of some 200,000. Here we took on stores and war vessels from all parts of the world. The curious asphalt lake is here. You meet people from all parts of the globe. English, Irish, Scotch, French, Spanish, Portuguese and Germans. Here the most picturesque and chiefly Portuguese, the wholesale chief-tain.

Demerara is our last place to call, here the attraction is fine sugar and what you would find in Holland. Here you find many Hindoos and Coolies, imported by companies to work on the plantations. Here you encounter also the tiger cat and an animal called the Labba. Here are tropical forests and see the wonderful tropical foliage. Here I must bring my rambling letter to a close. There are many things to be seen and described on a tour through the West Indies, but I fear to tax the patience of my readers by a greater length.

One deep impression I have carried home with me. The West Indies Islands, belonging to Great Britain, are places of great fruit growing and agricultural resources, but they are not half cultivated. What they need is the northern capital and energy and enterprise to develop them. The people, especially the colored races, are lazy to the shiftless. They will starve rather than work. If the Islands were joined to Canada, if better and more frequent steamship lines were established, if trade flowed to and fro more freely, if the Islands were cultivated to their full capacity, then the West Indies would become as wealthy and prosperous as they are beautiful.

Let me mention one thing more. The chief drawback to a trip to the West Indies is the sea voyage. Often it is half cultivated. What I say, but frequently between Halifax and Bermuda, prior to developed there. There is last for two or three days at a stretch, and the feeling of sickness at the sea sickness are the only features that discourage the traveller from undertaking the voyage.

Yours respectfully,
GEORGE A. BLEWETT.

The Yellow Holly

BY FERGUS HUME.

As it proved, there was no necessity for George to go there. Lola was stopping in the policecourt prison to her removal to the prison at Chelmsford. Her attempt at robbery had been committed on the previous day, and Brendon thought she would have already been removed. However, he was informed that there was some delay owing to the illness of the Chelmsford inspector, and therefore Lola would have to remain in Wargrove for another twelve hours. Brendon was glad to hear this, as it would save him a long journey. He thanked the policeman who had explained and was directed by the man to the house of his superior officer, which was on the outskirts of the town. George soon found a semi-detached house with a notice on it and on knocking at the door explained his errand to a very little woman. She pursed up her lips, looked inquisitively at him with bright eyes and called her husband. George produced a sovereign, but the official, although his eyes twinkled, hesitated to take the bribe. It was then that Mrs. Policeman came to Brendon's assistance.

"Nonsense, Jeremiah," she said briskly. "Let the young gentleman see his young lady. She's dying to have a sight of him."

"It's all very well," grumbled Jeremiah. "But I'm against the law."

"You can be present at our interview if you like."

"There, Jeremiah, you can't have the gentleman saying fairer than that." Here the sharp little woman nudged her husband's arms. This was a hint for him to swallow his principles and take the sovereign. Jeremiah agreed, and shortly the sovereign was in his pocket and he was leading George to a back upstairs room.

Before introducing George to this abode it struck Jeremiah that the prisoner had been inquired for as "the young lady." He stopped Brendon at the door. "Might you know her name, sir?"

"She is the most celebrated dancer in London, and her name is Lola Velez," said George. "I don't suppose she'll be punished much for this. She's mad at times."

"Oh, if she's mad she'll get off lightly, but then parish register to be torn —it's bad work that. My father were a sexton," explained Jeremiah soberly.

"And naturally you think Mlle. Velez has committed the most atrocious of crimes. But don't stand chattering here, my good fellow. I have to return by the 9 train."

"I'll wait outside," said Jeremiah as he slowly unlocked the door.

Lola was seated by the window staring out into the darkness. On the table was a small lamp, and a fire burned in the grate. Lola started as Brendon at the door closed again. "Who is—who is?" she asked in her rapid way, and came toward him.

"Lola," began George, but he got no further. She ran forward and cried out:

"Oh, my dear one, hast thou come in anger? Trample me not down as the earth, beloved, but be not enraged—ah, no—ah, no!"

"Lola," he said, taking a chair near her, "I have come as your friend."

"Not in anger—ah, but yes, in anger." "I am not angry. I am very sorry."

"Ah, but in your eyes—they sparkle. I see Mees Varda. I do try to steal the church books. You are furiously enraged."

"Look at me and see."

But Lola would not, so George took her chin and made her gaze directly into his eyes. Lola's were filled with tears, but after a time she began to smile. "Ah, you are not enraged. It was for you I did it. I wish my dear George to myself—all—all."

"You know that is impossible."

"But it is not. I will have you."

"Not at all," said George deliberately. "You will marry Bawdsey."

"That pig—cow—horrible and miserable! 'Oh, ah, no!" She sprang to her feet. "Never! I do swear," and producing a small black crucifix from her dress she kissed it vehemently.

"Now, Lola, I wish you to tell me the truth."

"Ah, but I will. When you are kindness I tell you all."

"Do you know that you have done a wrong thing?"

"—ch—it is not impossibles."

"I did she ever hint who killed my father?"

Lola shook her head. "No. Never did she say anythings. He was found dead—stabbed"—she made a gesture—"that was all—all!"

Evidently she could ill him nothing, so George reverted to more immediate matters. "How about that night? You knew that I was going to Mrs. Jersey's on that night?"

"Ah, but yes. You did tell me."

"Then what made you come also? Was it to see me?"

Lola put her finger in her mouth and looked down. "No, my George. I do want that confession of the fat old lady, to stop you being milor, and then I thought you would marry only poor Lola."

"How did you know about the confession?"

"That pig man told me."

"Bawdsey? What did he tell you?"

"Pschutt!" said Lola contemptuously. "He loves me so, I can twist and twist him so." She made a rapid motion with her fingers. "We do talk many time of your fathers. I lamented that my poor mother did loves your fathers unhappily, as I did love you. And I was strange to think that your fathers had died. I did ask Bawdsey who made the stab—gave the death?—eh, it is, so I asked," she added, nodding. "He could not say, but he knows that Mrs.—what you call her—eh, but my friend, Mrs."—

"Mrs. Jersey. Bawdsey declared that she knew?"

Lola nodded. "It was so," she assented. "Mrs.—what you call that fat ladys—she write out all she know of your father's death and of his marriages. I say to myself that I would get that confession and learn where the marriage was and then I would burn the book that no one might learn. After I would say to you that I could tell who killed your father if you made me maidservant to you."

"That's a very pretty plot," said Brendon. "So far you have carried it out. Now as to the confession"—

Lola put her hand on her breast. "He is here," she said, nodding. "I carries him always—always!"

"Give it to me, Lola." "How"

Her eyes opened in wide alarm. "Ah, no, you will not ask me. I keep him to myself all."

George saw that the moment was not propitious. But he was determined to get the confession before he left her. However, he begged her to continue her story. "How did you know the house?" he asked.

"It was the scarlet windows"—

"I remember. Bawdsey gave you that for guide."

"Bah! He knew not I was going," said Lola, with a shrug. "I got out of him the fool one all that I did want. I thought I would get to the fat ladys on the night you were with her, that I might have you for helps if she was enraged."

"It seems to me that you protected yourself very well."

"With the daggers—oh, yes. I said to myself that if my George did not come for the fogs, that Mrs.—what you say—Jarsey, oh, yes, would be enraged, and I would have trouble. I took the stiletto to save myself."

"How did you get into the house?"

"Wat, ah, wait! I did not dance all that night. I said I was ill, and I came aways. I took the daggers and a cloak, and I went to the square—it is not far from my house"—

"No. You just turn the corner of the street," said Brendon. "Well?"

"I walked by the walls. It was after 10 o'clocks. I walk round and round the squares, and I then see a red lights. The door open—it was open, and many people came out of the house. The fat lady was on the steps, waving her hands—so." Lola waved her hand. "A crowd was around. I came into the crowd, and when the fat lady was down shaking with the handshake I did slip into the house."

"That was clever of you," said George, wondering at the dexterity with which Lola had managed to enter without exciting suspicion. "And then what did you do? Did you meet any one?"

"Ah, but no. I ran into a place. There was a room with a light, and that I did go into"—

"Mrs. Jersey's sitting room," murmured George. "Yes?"

"I was afraid to be thrown out, my dear, and I hided myself a curtain at the window. The fat lady she did come in and close the door. She talked to herself of Lord Derrington coming, and did seem certain that I him wishing to come—you understand?"

"Yes. What then?"

"She took from a box"—

"A green box, Lola?"

"Yes, a green box—she did take a blue envelope, and she looked at a paper—a white paper she took from the envelope. She like what she read, milor would love to have this. I say to myself behind the curtains: 'It is the confessions,' I will have it. Then she did put it in the envelopes and leave it on the tables. It was near me. I could steal"—

"And you did!" said George impatiently.

"But no, my George. I did try, and madame she saw my arm. With a cry she leaped to the door, I come out, and say that I wish to talk of the deaths of Monsieur Vanes. She turns most white, and did not cry no more. Then she ask me what I want. I told madame I was of San Remo, and did talk of my dear mother, and of her love for Monsieur Vane. But this pig woman insult my mother. I become enraged, I bring my dagger and wave it so." Again Lola made a dramatic gesture. "I say that I kill her. She fall on her knees and hide her face. Then I did take the confessions out of the blue envelopes and hide it."

"That was very clever of you, Lola. Did Mrs. Jersey see?"

"Ah, but no she did not. I take it when she was with the eyes covered. Then having all what I was desire, and seeing her so afraid, I had the contempt look you. I say, 'There, there,' and I throw the dagger at her feets. Then I go to the door and say I would depart. She beg me to stop. I did stop, and we talk of San Remo and of my mother. I say that I never you my love, and that Monsieur Vane was the father of you"—

"Then she knew who I was on that night?"

"Ah, yes, but she did. I say you wish to see her the next day. She say, I will tell him nothings, and now go, for I have to see a great gentlemans. I was quite happy."

"Did she not miss the confession?"

"No! I said nothing of wanting that. It was in my pocket. The blue envelope was on the table. She never thought but what it was within. Then she ask me to say nothing to any one about San Remo, and we part quite happy. She allowed me out of the door and closed it again, oh, so softly. I never her no more."

"You left the dagger behind?"

"It was on the floors where I threw it. I wished to get away with the confessions and could not call me thieves. I did not wait for to take the dagger. I departed. That is all."

"Humph!" said George. The story seemed likely enough. After letting Lola out of the house Mrs. Jersey then came to see if he and Train were in bed. Expecting Lord Derrington and knowing from Lola who he was, she no doubt expected George to interrupt the interview. But finding him, as she thought, in bed, she departed satisfied. Then she met Margery, and after locking her in her room went down to meet her death. It was 11 when all this happened, and Bawdsey, in the coat of Lord Derrington, arrived close upon 12. Therefore, as Lola left Mrs. Jersey alive and Bawdsey found her dead, she must have been killed in the interval, and whoever had done this had used the dagger left by Lola.

However, George had learned all he wished to know in the meantime, and it only remained to get the confession from Lola. She refused to give it up. George entreated, cajoled, stormed, insisted, but she still held out. "No, I will not; I will not," she kept saying.

Finally he hit on a solution of the difficulty. "If you do not give it to me it will be taken from you when you go to prison."

"Ah, but will it?" cried Lola, wide eyed with alarm.

"Certainly, and will probably be published in the papers. Keep it if you like, Lola, but don't blame me if you get into trouble over it. I assure you if you keep it they will take it."

Lola pulled a white packet from her breast and ran with it to the fire.

"They will not have it, I burn—I burn," and she threw the papers on the fire. George shot past her, snatched them up before they could catch alight, and thrust them into his pocket. Lola turned on him like a tigress, and he thought she would strike him. She seemed inclined to do so, when unexpectedly she threw up her arms and fell into a chair weeping. "It is the end—you love me no more—we part—we part. The confessions will part us, all—all, alas!"

CHAPTER XXI.

GEORGE returned to town with the confession of Mrs. Jersey in his pocket. On arriving at the Liverpool street station he wrote a note to Kowlaski telling him of Lola's plight and advising him to engage counsel for her defense. In another half hour he was in his own rooms.

After making a good meal, for he felt the need of food to sustain him, he sat down to read the manuscript of Mrs. Jersey.

The confession of the wretched woman who had come to so tragic an end was written on several sheets of foolscap loosely pinned together. She wrote in a most cold blooded way and seemingly exulting in her wickedness. All through her confession ran a venomous strain of deadly hatred toward George's mother, and indeed against any woman who paid attention to Vane. Jenny Howard was not spared, and the woman Velez, "who kept an oil shop," was mentioned.

"My parents were of humble station," began Mrs. Jersey abruptly. "I believe my mother was a lady's maid. She married my supposed father, who was a butler. I say 'my supposed father,' as it is here reason to believe that I was the daughter of a certain Italian count who had loved and betrayed my mother. In her moments of rage my mother would taunt my supposed father with this, but when calm she always denied that there was any truth. When I grew old enough to understand she rebuked me for asking about the matter. 'You are my daughter,' she said abruptly, 'and the daughter of Samuel Stokes, who is the biggest fool and the greatest coward I know.'

"It will be seen that there was no love lost between my parents. My father, Stokes—as I may call him, though I believe the count was my real sire—was always very kind to me and shielded me from my mother's rage. She treated me very cruelly, when fifteen I was glad to go out as a scullery maid so as to escape her persecution. Shortly after I took up life on my own account she died in a fit of violent rage, during which she broke a blood vessel.

"It is needless to give my early life in detail. I rose from scullery maid to housemaid. Then I became parlor maid in a suburban villa, where the wages were poor and the food was bad. I took charge of children when not doing housework and managed to get on. But I was ambitious. I wished to get among the servants of the aristocracy. A friend of mine who was maid to the Duchess of —— taught me her duties, and I procured a situation. I pleased my mistress, and she promised to do much for me. However, she died, and I was thrown on the world. I saw an advertisement for a lady's maid and got the situation. It was in this way that I became the servant of that woman whom I hated so deeply.

"She was called Rosina Lockwood and was no better than myself. Her father was a low man who taught singing, and she appeared herself on the stage. I never thought she was beautiful myself.

"At first I rather liked Miss Lockwood. She was kind to me in her silly way, and the gentlemen who were in love with her gave me plenty of money to deliver notes and other things. There was one gentleman who was the best of them all—and the biggest fool over her blue eyes and fair hair. His name was Ireland, and he had plenty of money. He came to learn singing from old Lockwood simply to be near her, and proposed three times to my knowledge. But she would have nothing to do with him, which was foolish, as he had money, and she could have twisted him round her finger.

"I was a handsome girl in those days, though I say it myself. But if a woman is good looking why shouldn't she say so? I had a perfect figure and a complexion like peaches and cream. My hair was as black as night, and my eyes were sparkling and large. I taught myself to read and write, and I learned French. Also I learned to play the piano and to conduct myself like a lady, as I always was.

"I knew all there was to be known about for the gentleman who would give me my rightful position as a lady. From my Italian father I inherited artistic tastes, and I was not going to remain a low, vulgar common servant all my life, not me.

"I was twenty-three when Percy was his dear name, and his blood was very blue. Lord Derrington was his father, a most aristocratic nobleman, who was an old brute, from my experience of him. But he was of high rank I don't deny, and Percy had the blood of heroes in his veins. He came to take lessons from Rosina, and I was a time I saw that he was in love with my mistress. It was her arts that captured him, else he would have turned from her to me. But he never did.

"How handsome and fascinating was Percy Vane! Fair hair and blue eyes and the figure of a life guardsman—just the kind of man I liked. He was kind to me—for her sake, I suppose—and gave me money and presents. She said she loved him, and used to make me sick with talking of him. I let her think I was her dear friend, as it is the best known in my views feelings she would have sent me away.

"Lord Derrington was angry with Percy for loving my mistress, and I don't wonder at it. A low singing woman. Percy had some money of his own, inherited from his mother, and he proposed to elope. He said that Lord Derrington could not touch the estates away from him and that some day he would come in for the title. He was going to be Lady Derrington. I was glad of that.

"Well, they eloped. After singing at a concert in St. James' hall he met her outside and took her to Liverpool street station. I was waiting there with the luggage. We went down to a place called Wargrove, in Essex, and the very next day they were married in the church of that parish. I was furious, but what could I do? Had I told Lord Derrington he might have stopped the marriage, but Percy would never have forgiven me, and I did not wish to lose sight of him. As Mrs. Vane's maid I had chances of seeing him daily and of basking in the light of his eyes. It was weak of me, but I loved him so dearly that I would have done anything simply to be in his presence. But I wish now that I had prevented the marriage. Since I could not get him, I didn't see why she should bear off the prize.

"Afterward we went to Paris, and from that place Percy wrote to tell his grandfather that he was married. I knew he had to write from that place, for the letter was given to me to post, and I opened it. I never gave it a thought at the moment, but afterward Percy's mother told me in telling where the marriage had taken place did me a lot of good. I should not now be at San Remo but for that lucky omission. Lord Derrington would have nothing to do with his son, and there was trouble with Mr. Lockwood.

"I lived with the two of them during their married life. A son was born, and she died. I was glad when she died, and I was sorry she left the boy. Percy was wrapped up in the child and gave him to me to nurse. Mrs. Vane had married Percy in Chatse, and then Percy, with myself and the baby, went to Monte Carle. He gambled there in order to forget his grief, though I don't see what he had to forget when Percy would marry me. I knew that the future Lady Derrington would hold a high position, and I qualified myself to fill the position gracefully. I did work. I learned arithmetic and French like a native. I got an old artist to teach me Italian, which I mastered. I bought a book which taught the manners of good society. Percy saw the change in me and congratulated me on the improvement, and I had them place in me since leaving England.

NEW THOUGHTS.

Are you growing more attractive as you advance in life?

"Given a healthy body," says Dr. R. V. Pierce, the specialist in women's diseases, of Buffalo, N. Y., "and a healthy mind, and every woman can cultivate and enjoy happiness."

We must eat properly and digest well to be beautiful. It is a fact that any form of dyspepsia may in a few days transform a clear, white skin into a mass of pimples and black spots. A beautiful woman has the beauty of her stomach.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery maintains a person's nutrition by enabling one to eat, retain, digest and assimilate the proper nutritious food. It overcomes the gastric irritability and nervous indigestion, and thus the person is saved from those symptoms of fever, night-sweats, headache, etc., which are so common. A tonic made up largely of alcohol will shrink the corpuscles of the blood and make them weaker for resistance.

"This is to certify that I have used Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, think it's the greatest medicine in the world," writes Mrs. V. M. Young, of Weir, W. Va. "I had dyspepsia in its worst form. I decided to try your medicine. I used five bottles, and now I am doing my own housework. A number of my friends also are using Dr. Pierce's medicine and they recommend it highly. May God bless you in your grand work."

Dr. Pierce believes that a tonic made with alcohol will shrink the red blood corpuscles and make the system weak for resistance; that is why he avoided the use of such alcohol or narcotics in his "Medical Discovery," which contains the pure extract from roots and herbs without a particle of alcohol.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for dyspepsia or debility.

Biliousness is cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

"As to that child, I should have liked to drown it or to have given it to gypsies. As Lady Derrington I did not care for it, but as Mrs. Percy Vane I was sorry. I loved the boy so that he used to make me envious the way he doted on me. And I got rid of the child—and I thought of a thousand safe ways I could have done so—I should only have been sent away.

"I knew that it came in Milan. We were stopping at the Hotel de Ville, and there was a waiter who fell in love with me. He was an English boy called George Bates, a horrid, scrubby, red haired, nasty, pale faced creature, who worried me to death. Besides, he was younger than I was, and I wished for a husband to protect me. I should have had to look after George Rates, whereas Percy in the days to come would look after me. Besides I felt that it was an impertinence for a low waiter to expect me to marry him, me, who had done so much to improve myself and my position, and to bring a proud rank among the British aristocracy.

"At first I laughed at him, but he became such a nuisance that I told him plainly that I would have nothing to do with him. He then accused me of being in love with my master. I acknowledged it proudly. Why should I not? A woman should glory in her love. I did. I told George Bates of my feelings full vent and bore him to the ground under the storm of my indignation. He told the other servants, and they insulted me, especially the English aboes, as there were two or three in the hotel. I was persecuted, but I bore all for Percy's sake. Then it came to his ears. Percy heard what I had said to George Rates. He called me in. He accused me of making him ridiculous, of being of a low mind, of a thousand and one cruel things. I lost my head. I told him how I loved him. I knelt at his feet. I implored that he would reward my love—my long suffering. He laughed in my tearful face. At that moment I hated him, but not for long. My life was bound up in his. When he dismissed me I thought that my heart was broken.

"I was dismissed. He procured a new nurse from England—a Scotch hussy, as ugly as she was silly. I saw her often in Milan after my dismissal. Oh, that time! Oh, those weary days! Yes, I was ill. I moaned. I was a wreck. With what money I had I went to a convent near Milan and stopped there for a month. But I could not remain there forever. So I came out. He was gone. I went to inquire at the hotel. He had gone to Como. I wrote forward a message came that all letters were to be sent to San Remo. I determined to go to San Remo and to be near him. I would not tell him that George Rates, who was still in love with me, proved a willing tool. I could not get to San Remo without money. He offered to advance me the railway fare, and I got me a situation in the Hotel d'Angleterre as housemaid. He also was going there for the season as a waiter. I said that if he took me to San Remo I would marry him. He did so, and I—but that comes later. Sufficient it is to say that George believed in my promise and that I found myself again in the presence—the heavenly presence —of my adored Percy.

"But I had only come to submit myself to fresh anguish. He saw me, but took no notice of me. I was afraid to follow him too closely lest he should ask the police to interfere. George Rates was jealous, too, and I had to consider him, as, failing Percy rewarding my love, I could fall back on George. He was always useful to supply the money for me to get back to England, where I was certain of a situation. I handled the situation in a manner to create discord between him and Percy without his seeing me and without exciting too openly the jealousy of George Rates.

"But it was the horrid girl that caused me pain. She was one of the daughters of General Howard, whom Percy had met at Como. The two girls both had themselves out to stay with my darling. But their arts did not succeed at Como. Jenny was the one who tried hardest to get him, but Violet took her chance also. When they came to San Remo they stopped at the Hotel d'Angleterre. I looked after their room, and knowing where they were, I made myself their friend. They knew me as the former nurse of Percy's little son and wondered how I came to be a housemaid. I told some story which satisfied them. I forget what it was. They believed in me thoroughly, and they found out that I loved Percy. They were amused, and I hated them for it. Then said Percy that I was watching him, and he came to the hotel no more. But I still pretended to be their friend for my own ends. There was a masked ball coming off, and the Miss Howards wished to go unbeknown to their father. I entered into the spirit of the joke. I procured them two blue dominos and each a sprig of yellow holly so that they might know one another. They went to the ball thus disguised.

"I went also in the same dress. I had got a third blue domino, and I also wore a sprig of holly. In my pocket I took a stiletto. Why did I do that? Because I was determined to kill any one who tried to make love to my Percy. I knew that Jenny Howard, the little cat, would try to get him to love her, and I would have killed her with pleasure had she become Percy's bride. As I was masked, I had no fear of being discovered should I stab any one, and, moreover, were there trouble, the Misses Howard, being dressed as I was, even to the sprig of yellow holly, might be accused of any crime that might happen. Moreover, even if I killed Jenny Howard, the two sisters quarreled and that on the evidence of the holly and the domino Violet might be charged with the crime.

"About the stiletto. I received that from a low shopkeeper called Velez, who was in love with Percy. She and her husband kept an oil shop, and her husband was very jealous of her. She was madly in love with Percy, as I found out when buying something at her shop. That I got to know her intimately.

"I heard Percy propose to marry Jenny, and I was minded then to kill her. I drew the stiletto from my breast and would have rushed forward, hoping to escape in the confusion when I killed her. But my heart failed me; even when she was left alone my heart failed me. Jenny took off her mask, and I left her sitting waiting for Percy's return. Then I followed Percy and saw Violet join him. I knew it was Violet, owing to the unmasking of Jenny, and, moreover, I had seen her dressed as I was. She loved him also—the cat! However, I saw that she wanted to speak Percy out of the place by making him think she was Jenny. Then I followed. He took her home to the gates of the hotel and left her there. When he was gone I went to the ball I stopped him at the bottom of the parade. There was no one in sight, it was late, and a clear moon was shining.

"Percy thought I was Violet, whom he mistook for her sister. He addressed me in such endearing tones as Jenny and myself received that surely about what he called the rashness of following him from the hotel that I lost my temper. I snatched off the mask and dagged out my face. Percy burst out laughing when he recognized me. He said—never mind what he said—but it was an insult, and my Italian blood boiled in my veins. I drew the stiletto and rushed on him. At that moment my hand was caught from behind, and I fell. It was that man Ireland, who was then at San Remo, and a great friend of Percy's. He had wrenched the stiletto out of my hand. For a moment no one said anything, and I arose to my feet. Ireland addressed me as Miss Howard—Miss Violet Howard. Percy laughed again and corrected his mistake, saying that I was a lovesick nursemaid whom he had discharged. Then I lost my temper.

"Stop! I must say exactly how it happened. Percy was leaning against the parapet of the parade in a careless attitude. He did not even move when I rushed on him with the stiletto. I had Ireland not caught my arm I should have killed him. Ireland said that he had followed me, supposing I was Violet Howard, to ask me to return to the hotel. He talked some rubbish about a gentle born English girl being out at night, but when he found that I was only a servant there was no more of that talk. Poor Elisa Stokes could have been out till dawn for all these gentlemen cared. They laughed at me, Percy leaning against the parapet, Ireland beside me, holding the stiletto carelessly in his hand. As I said, I lost my temper, and I told Percy what I thought of that fool Rosina Lockwood. He lost his temper also, but that only made me more angry. At last he dashed forward, and I believe he would have struck me but that Mr. Ireland intervened.

"I don't remember exactly how it happened, but in moving Mr. Ireland evidently forgot how he held the stiletto

Napanee's Greatest ...Store.

THE—

Robinson Co.

The Men's Store is as separate and distinct here as though we had no other business. And the men in charge of the Men's Goods haven't. They are specialists.

This Store aims to give a simple, straight forward, good natured, expert and accurate service that will please and benefit its customers.

WE ARE SHOWING & SELLING

More Carpets and Housefurnishings than any Napanee Store ever did.

As nearly as we have records to prove and as conscience tells us to prove.
In quantity our showing excels.
In quality, in selection, the leadership is pronounced.
The reason we excel in Carpet styles, for instance, is as simple as A B C. We have exclusive right to lines of carpets that other people do not see It's a question of enterprise and taste. That's all of it.

CARPET REMNANTS. Lengths up to 30 yards. We have marked them cheap, so that you will take them out of our way. Bring your measurements.

Beautiful Millinery.

Styles are inspired by the vogue of the Louis and Empire periods. The headwear worn by the court ladies when Louis XIV., Louis XV. and Louis XVI ruled France, and styles that distinguished the Napoleonic and Second Empire periods of France. We don't go to Paris but we adopt Paris styles to the needs of our individual customers. We often have individual customers in mind when evolving some new hat idea, and they invariably suit the one we had in view.

To-morrow evening—the night before Easter—we will have a special display of Fabric and Kid Gloves. Come and See.

The New Dress Linens.

Linens for dress will play a very important part in fashion circles this year. You can take our word for that and there is no guess work about it either.

Fine handkerchief Linen and all grades of texture in white from that to heavy butcher's linen.
Linens will be used for coats, for frocks, for tailored suits, for waists, for separate skirts.
Colored Linens will have a ready sale.
Choice won't be quite so fine when wearing time is at hand. Stocks are full and complete now.

Women's Fawn and Black Coats at $5, $6, $10.

We are especially pleased with the smart styles in Fawn Coats that we show at $5. There isn't much "in it" for us, but there is great value in it for you; we're content. Lined and unlined, some sizes are lined with a good quality of serge silk. In the $10 Coats, at the time of writing this, some sizes are missing, but we have the promise of the maker that he will complete our order this week.

English Mohairs.

No Mohairs, the world over, approach these in beauty of weave and color effects. Large showing of these in Dress Goods section, any and every day now. There are dozens of colors and effects, notably the Melange and Heather weaves introducing the iridescent color blends.

New Colored Parasols.

Not the weather for using them, but the careful dressers are now making their selections. The small hats will make Parasols a necessity this summer. The Chiffon Fluffy Parasols are almost obsolete. The coaching, rather severe styles, are the order of the day. Colors to match the new gowns, tinted wood handles, bone tips, Dresden effects, stripes, are some of the features. Main aisle.

Leather Hand Bags, Wrist Bags, Music Bags and Pocket Books.

The assortment of our leather goods this week meets about all the usual requirements in the way of needed articles. Several New York articles are included to brighten up the Easter assortment. Choosing is ample all the way from 25c to $1.50.

Summer Dress Stuffs from the Cotton Dress Goods Section.

It is not a question of what have we in cotton wash goods, but what haven't we, and it would puzzle you to find anything missing that ought to be on view. We never had such a complete showing of the new and beautiful and staple in Summer Cottons, and that is saying all that can be said, for the reason that for years past ROBINSONS' HAVE ALWAYS LED IN STYLES. If out of town, write for samples; if in town, don't forget us.

This Store is chuck full of Novelties that are suitable for Faster Gifts.

The Eisenstuck Hosiery for Girls, Boys and Women.

J. W. Eisenstuck, of Chemnitz, Germany, is one of the world's wizards in stocking making. You have probably worn Eisenstuck's stockings year in and year out, and while congratulating yourself on the goodness of the Hosiery, probably never gave the name of the maker a thought. We control his stuff for entries. We have all our Eisenstuck Hosiery dyed by Hermsdorf, making the best combination of Hosiery goodness that it is possible to procure. Plains, Ribbed, Drop-stitched, Lace embroidered, Blacks, Tans, all sizes.

Women's Neckwear.

Look to your Collars and Cuffs. The Neckwear section is brimming over with the new things. Dainty, inexpensive prices. Collar and Cuff setts start at 15c. Hundreds of Fancy Collar novelties at 20c and 25c, and you can be as extravagant as you like all the way to $7.50 each.

Women's Stylish Raincoats—Savings of from $1.75 to $3.75.

Sounds queer to talk of saving on the very things that are tip top as to fashion and need. The fact of the matter is they were samples. Many kinds and not more than two alike. We bought them less on that account. Hence, $5.00 kinds for $3.75, $6.50 for $4.88, $15.00 for $11.25, $10.00 for $7.50.

Women's Waists.

NEW AND BEAUTIFUL. OVER A HUNDRED STYES.

Take a bird's eye view of the Waist Section. Literally crammed full of the prettiest waists we have ever shown. Muslins 50c to $5.00; Silks $2.50 to $10.00.

Table Linens.

This Linen Section of ours grows richer and richer in its stocks—exclusive fine things that one must see to appreciate. We refer particularly to Pattern Cloths with Napkins to match. Easter holidays bring visitors. Put us to test if you want some extras.

New Corsets.

Every woman should know—all dressmakers know—the supreme importance of getting a corset that fits and is in style as a preliminary step to getting the new gowns fitted. We are dressmakers and know the importance of correct fitting corsets. Enquire at our corset counter and you will be shown the models adapted for your figure.

Women's Umbrellas.

Here are a lot of sample umbrellas that were bought underprice. We sell as we buy—hence 50c kind are 37 1-2c, 75c ones are are 56c, $1.00 sorts are 75c, $2.00 kinds for $1.50.

MILLINERY OPENING, TAMWORTH.

On Wednesday, April 5th, Miss Dexter held her millinery opening, which was a decided success. The parlors were beautifully decorated for the occasion and the display of hats was perfectly charming, which reflected the credit upon Miss Dexter and her assistants, especially Miss Wilson, the trimmer.

Among the newest features we noticed the blending of the shades, which would bring to one's mind a beautiful spring garden, the purple of the violet, tulle and box plaiting. Popular shapes are the Napoleon and turnbull. A very pretty hat, which was much admired, was a large black tuscany Roosevelt of fancy mohair, edged with plaited tulle and brussels net, rolling high from the left side. Another was a black tuscany sailor plume, and was finished at the back with a large jet bugle.

Another especially admired was a white Dress May, three-cornered in shape. Upper brim and crown was of folded chiffon with a bunch of small french roses nestled near the front. The underbrim was of shirred chiffon and long chiffon ties with fancy ends were fastened at the back.

Another pretty hat was made of three rows of chiffon, white shaded to a deep cream, which was all laid in Vandyke points. The edge of crown and brim were finished with a plaiting of brussels net. A beautiful wreath of currants with foliage rested on the upperbrim and crushed rosettes were placed on the underbrim, on either side of the front and beautiful white chiffon ties finished the back.

A large number of ladies' bonnets and children's hats were shown, and are noted for the amount of hand work. The supplies ready-to-wears and spring hats are small, but the summary hats are shown here.

ABOUT RHEUMATISM.

There are few diseases that inflict more torture than rheumatism and there is probably no disease for which such a varied and useless lot of remedies have been suggested. To say that it can be cured is, therefore, a bold statement to make, but Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which enjoys an extensive sale, has met with great success in the treatment of this disease. One application of Pain Balm will relieve the pain, and hundreds of sufferers have testified to permanent cures by its use. Why suffer when Pain Balm affords such quick relief and costs but a trifle? "THE FIELD OF BLOOD"

STORY OF INIQUITOUS BARGAIN AND USE OF TAINTED MONEY.

MORBIDITY OF SOME PEOPLE

Wonderful Lessons From the Evils of Avarice and Cupidity—Warning to Men Treading the Path of Sin—Evil Comrades All Leave in the Day of Trial—Necessity to Eradicate the Tendency to Sin.

Exposition According to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, at the Department of Agriculture, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 1.—From the story of an iniquitous bargain and the use to which the tainted money earned by it was put the preacher in this sermon draws lessons of the evil that come from avarice and cupidity. The text is Matthew xxvii, 8, "Wherefore that field was called the field of blood."

A gruesome fascination hovers about the bricks and mortar, the fences and boards, and the grounds where lived and wrought some of the world's evil workers. Last as the Wonderful Wonderful name, rich in historical associations! I see the boats every spring and summer and fall filled with sightseers almost daily pushing out upon the Nile river to seek this little island near Marietta. Why? Is it a summer playground? Is it an Isle of Wight? Is its scenery a marvel? Are its fruits terraced? Are its trees filled with sweetest of songsters as they were once in the hanging gardens? No, indeed. Harman Blennerhassett, took his bride there and changed this island into an Edenic garden, as Nebuchadnezzar, who had courted Princess Amytis among the hills of Ecbatana, to humor the whims of his queen, had lifted high for the wonderment of the world the famous "hanging gardens of Babylon." Oh, no. Blennerhassett and to-day is of little intrinsic value. A few scrub trees, a few rocks, perhaps a few berries such as can be seen in scores of islands in the middle of this Ohio river are all the aesthetic beauties it has to offer to the landscape artist. But to the historian Blennerhassett has the same fascination as have the broken walls of Kenilworth Castle. Blennerhassett is immortal on account of the infamous history of Aaron Burr. It was in this place the ex-vice-president stopped on his way to establish a monarchy in the great southwest. It has an evil fame as the rendezvous of the traitorous conspirator of a day, just as is the other house in a side street of Washington in which Mary E. Surratt welcomed the things of darkness the time she was plotting the assassination of Abraham Lincoln.

Scores and hundreds of people naturally seek in fascinated awe the places where a great crime has been committed. They gape on the floor of the Episcopal cathedral, and shudder as good Episcopalians. Those believers in Shakespeare's Stratford, as Garfield was shot, for years had its thousands of sightseers. The scene of the Chicago Haymarket riot, the place where Edward Stokes shot James Fisk, the sausage vat where Luetgert disintegrated the body of his murdered wife, all have been visited by sightseers even as the room in which George Washington breathed his last has its daily visitors.

Crowds of sightseers in Jerusalem for years after the crucifixion went to the scene of my text out of a morbid curiosity, as the first disciples went to the Island of Blennerhasset. Indeed, had they not gone out of a morbid curiosity they never would have gone at all. "Aceldama—that is to say, the field of blood"—as, at some people might suppose, an Esdraelon plain where a mighty battle was fought. It was an old potters field, filled with clay. It was too poor ground to be used for agricultural purposes. It had been turned into a pauper cemetery. Yet this paupers' burial ground had for years hosts of sightseers. Why? Perhaps the best way to answer you is to tell you what some of the sightseers are now saying. "Yes, this is ground," says one. "Judas bought this field with the priests with the thirty pieces of silver. Judas received for betraying Christ." "Aceldama—that is, the field of blood"—says another; "it is well named." Could we have a better subject to preach upon on the Sabbath preceding Good Friday than this pottersfield, this paupers' burying ground bought with the money Judas received for betraying Christ?

Aceldama is the most impressive lesson that there is no honor among thieves. When a man becomes a Satanic hireling he is not likely to live long as partners in infamy. A murderer, in order to save his own neck, as a rule, will turn state's evidence against his companions in crime, giving away what will be just as willing to empty the purse of an associate as he is to snatch the watch of a bank president. It is often vaunted that there is honor among thieves, but experience proves that it is a vain boast. The thief has no honor. The evil spirit who seeks to lead you into temptation is the evil spirit who will desert you as soon as you have been caught in a fatal trap or are floundering in the quicksands of shame.

A sly fox has no loyalty to her kin. She has no conscience in desiring for her own skin. This characteristic is essentially true of the Satanic devotees. All that you have to do to prove this premise is to study how this Aceldama was purchased. For weeks and months the priests were trying to destroy Christ. They knew not how they might capture him, for they feared the people. At last one of their spies came and said: "Ah, ha, I have found the problem! One of Christ's apostles can be bribed. We will find out where Christ is in hiding at night. Then we will take some soldiers and go and arrest him and summon the sanhedrin and try him and convict him and crucify him before the people can come to the rescue. Here is my man at hand. Judas, what will you do? Will you betray your Master for thirty pieces of silver?" "I will," answered the apostate. Then it happened? No sooner is Christ betrayed and Judas is overcome with remorse than he comes back to his business partners and says: "I cannot take this money. It is blood money. Here it is." And he flings it at their feet. Well, what happens? Why, the priests look down upon this blood money and say: "That money is too the wise to keep. We cannot use a murderer's money in the temple. We are too good and holy for that. Let us take counsel among ourselves and buy a paupers' burial ground. That certainly will hurt no one. They got Judas to betray Christ. Then as soon as Judas had done this vile, underhand, sinful work they turned their backs upon him and said: "Judas, you are too low, too mean and too contemptible for us to have anything to do with you. We will not even take back the money we paid you with our hands. Get out of our sight forever."

Ah, the evil geniuses who lead us into temptation will never stand by us when they have miserably betrayed us. In ancient Rome the defenders for months were defying the northern barbarians. The enemies, finding that the gates could not be broken down. At last these barbarians got to a Roman woman and said, "If you will open for us the gates at night and let us in, we will give to you a gift of double the size of ornamental gold and silver." She opened the gates by night, and Rome was lost. But as soon as the northern barbarians became masters of Caesar's throne they destroyed the woman who betrayed her country. They gave her their shields of ornamental silver and gold, but they buried those shields at her with all the force of their spears and arms until her mangled and bleeding and lifeless body lay buried under her prises of war. Benedict Arnold, who betrayed his country he was hated even in those in England that were glad on the day he was seated in the gallery of the House of Commons when a statesman arose in defense of the traitor and commenting his speech he said: "I see in the gallery of this House a contemptible Manchester man who, to gain for his own land, has forfeited every right to the respect of mankind. Before I enter upon my speech I hope that Benedict Arnold, known as Arnold, the traitor, might be requested to withdraw from this body of gentlemen." Yes, the very men who profit by a crime despise the instrument and desert him in his ignominy.

Man treading the path of sin, do not be a fool. Do not suppose that your sinful people who are praising you now will fawn upon you after your morals and money are gone. Sell not the saloonkeeper waits is your gold; as soon as you are in rags his free lunch counters will no longer give a welcome to you and yours. All that gambler wants is your gold; as soon as your money is gone he will kick you out of his presence as willingly as he would put a bullet in the heart of a mad dog. Ah, yes, the many country's held plenty of friends as long as the youngers had horses and wine and suppers, but as soon as his money was gone his friends were gone, his wine was gone, his horses were gone, his servants were gone; there was a great famine in that land. Companions of sin will leave you as soon as Judas left Jesus.

Aceldama teaches another lesson. The easiest way to make an apostate is not by denouncing or ridiculing the divine mission of Jesus Christ, but by developing the tendencies to sin which have not been eradicated from his nature. Let me illustrate this sermon practically. You have all wandered through the northern forests in the winter time. Everywhere you see on the tall trunks of the trees supporting the bare branches. Not a leaf is in sight; not a flower is blooming. There are the millions upon millions of leaves which as an arched roof covered the mountain pathway last summer are now gone. But if you will rub your fingers lightly over the bark of almost any beech you can see where new buds and new sprouts will come forth just as soon as springtime places its warm and silver trumpet of the warm winds. As I approach a man who is called a Christian man I figuratively rub the outward sin, but as I touch his heart I find, still figuratively speaking, that all over his heart are latent buds ready to be developed. Unless a man lives close to Christ and continues to live close to Christ these evil buds will grow and grow even as the white apple blossoms come from the crabapple almost in one May day. The reason Judas betrayed Christ was because he allowed his latent buds of sin to develop; that is all.

"Judas not different from his fellow apostles? How was that?" some one asks me. "Why, Christ called him a devil." Aye, my friend, that is true. But Christ did not call Judas a devil in the sense that he was in the beginning any different from any other of the apostles. Indeed, I know he was just about the same. The apostles at that time were all ambitious, somewhat so much that they made him their treasurer. He was their almoner; he handled all the money. He was not looked upon as a devil. He was a calm, cool calculator. Why, if Peter had been elected treasurer in Judas' place, the first ten beggars who came to him would have got all that he had, and no provision would have been left for the needs of the little company. The reason Judas was elected treasurer was because at first he was loyal to his Master and he was very careful in handling the funds.

But when Judas began to look after the money he got the latent sin of his life grew warmer and budded and sprouted. Covetousness was Judas' sin. Every penny, every piece of silver and gold which came into his possession, only maddened his passions. Sometimes I can see him at night counting the gold while his companions slept. "Ah," he would say to himself, "if this gold was only mine." This passion, this evil passion, kept growing upon him. It was as the cancer that destroys the social position my have been growing upon you. Once Judas would have shocked a man down who would have placed a menacing or murderous hand upon his Christ. But now he kept saying: "Gold, gold; I must have gold. I must have gold, even if I do destroy Christ to get it." Listen! Let me trace the downfall of Judas—first, the honored apostleship; second, the ejection into the treasurership of the apostolic band; third, the hugging of the gold bags to satisfy the cravings of his developing avarice; fourth, the protest because the box of ointment of spikenard, very precious, was poured upon Christ's head; fifth, the selling of Christ's life for thirty pieces of silver. Judas was not a devil always. Judas was not a devil at first. He was regarded as some of us are going, slowly, surely, awfully, demoniacally, step by step, day by day.

The field of blood teaches us, in the next place, that the most awful danger that can be done against Christ is done by his apostates and not by his out and out bitter enemies. For weeks and months, as I said before, the high priests were trying to take Christ and slay him. "But when they sought to lay hands upon him they feared the multitudes, because they took him for a prophet." What is the meaning of this? They dared not touch him. Christ's beneficiaries at that time would have risen up and swept the high priests and the Pharisees from off the earth.

Happening toward the close of the Crimean war the English general had given order that Florence Nightingale was to be shot as a spy, what would have happened? Methinks about the, commander's tent would have been seen 5,000 poor fellows pleading and praying: "She nursed me through a fever and saved my life. She shall not die!" Another would say: "She held my hand when they cut off my leg. She shall not die!" Another would have said: "She bandaged my eyes, blasted by the gunpowder explosion. It was the account of her care that I now can see." So those whose limbs Christ had straightened and those whose eyes Christ had opened and those whose leprous skin Christ had cleansed would have risen and cried out: "He shall not die! He shall not die!" But when Judas led the Roman officers by night to the garden of Gethsemane and pointed where Christ was in retreat then Jesus was taken by stealth and tried while Jerusalem slept. He was tried by night. He was crucified on the early morning. Oh, my friends, shall I give to you and I as apostates who betrayed Christ into the hands of his enemies?

Another thought: "Aceldama—that is, the field of blood," teaches that remorse for a sin committed does not necessarily wipe off the record of that sin from the Lamb's book of life. Judas was sorry for his sin. No sooner had he given that betraying kiss than he would have been willing to cut off his right arm to have undone the damage. He flung the money back into the priests' faces. He did more than that. Learning of the death of his master and his mental sufferings, he went forth and hanged himself. He practically said: "Oh, my brain is crazed! Let me die!" But to be sorry for a past sin is not enough. Remorse is not salvation through Christ. Dr. Whitley well said in one of his sermons, "Judas had a right sorrow and a right, but no appreciation of the mercy of God in Christ and so he pined away in his iniquity."

Man, to-day you are under the power of sin. You are sorry because they dragged you down and down and down. But are you more than sorry? Are you ready to renounce them and to plead with God for pardon through the blood of Christ? This pardon is offered to all who come in Christ's name. Remorse for sin does not necessarily mean salvation by faith. There are two facts in the life of the prodigal son I would have you well bear in mind. The one is, he was sorry; the second fact, he arose and went back to his father's house. Oh, my brother, will you repent of your sins? Will you do more than that? Will you turn your back upon sin and look at the loving, forgiving face of Jesus Christ?

But the last thought to me is the sweetest of all. Standing by "Aceldama—that is, the field of blood." I find that, no matter how much we have sinned, God never loses his love for the sinner. God loves us and clings to us in sympathy, but also in forgiveness. He clings to her children. I asked a dear friend of mine some time ago who was the favorite among her many children? She answered, "I love the youngest best until he is grown, and then I love the sickest best until he is well, and the sick one best until he gets well." Yes, I said to myself, "And the prodigal best until he came back to his mother's love." So God clings to his wayward ones. The more we sin the more he wants us by his side and the more he pleads with us and clings to us.

Do we not find this fact true in reference to Judas' life? When Christ knew that Judas was to betray him, did he drive Judas from his side? No; that was not Christ's way. He kept Judas with him night and day. He drew it to be saying all the time, "Oh, Judas, why will thou betray the Son of man?" One of the basest acts of Christ's earthly life was to honor Judas above all his brethren when he gave to him the sop at the Passover. The giving of the sop was an act of love, not of hate. So Christ to-day is pleading with you and me. We may spit in his face, as did those who led him forth for crucifixion; we may place a crown of thorns upon his head; we may betray him with kisses, as did Judas, but we cannot make Christ cease to love us. Oh, my friends will not you and I yield to this love of Jesus Christ, which passeth all human understanding? We have wandered far, far away, but Christ is to-day still loving us. Will you accept his pardon? Will you love him who says to you?

This is a worldwide invitation which I am giving you to come to the saving feet of Jesus. Are you one who is feeling are the possibilities of human remorse? Are you one who is feeling that you are rotting this sermon in the quiet ude of my study the thought arose: "Are there those that are being ternally destroyed? God changed his mind in reference to the Ninevites in this: but there were those who said: "Oh, I do I know that Judas, even when he was dangling on the end of that rope, did not pray such supplication as brought him within the influence of the divine Father's forgiving love? Perhaps in the death struggle Judas called upon Christ for rescue. If he did, we have not that record. Christ did not pardon him? He could pardon Judas' sins just as he forgave Paul's, who was the "chief of sinners." If ruined did call for divine forgiveness, I know he received it, just as the penitent thief, as Mary Magdalene, as the woman of Samaria, received forgiveness when repentant, just as freely as you and I receive forgiveness. My friends, with such a divine love surrounding us, if you must throw yourself upon the mercy and atonement of Christ, which have saved in the past, which save to-day, and saved my life. She shall not time? The cross can be changed into a crown by changing the last two letters. Remorse can be changed into triumph if to-day, in Christ's mercy, you will reach up and look and live.

A THEORY PROVED.

A New Idea Which Means a Great deal in the Treatment and Cure of Disease.

Dr. Leonhardt, of Lincoln, Neb., the foremost physician of the Western States, has put forward a new theory as to the cause of disease. He says:

"There can be no doubt, from the evidence I have got from my patients and has always been the first cause of nine-tenths of all the ills that afflict mankind. The failure of the Stomach to digest the food properly results in fermentation and decomposition, and the poisonous matter from this foul and rotting mass get into the blood and thence into the nerves and breed diseases of every kind."

Dr. Leonhardt has found a remedy for indigestion, in its severest form, in Dr. Hamilton's Pills, and in Nerve and Constipation. He has tried them in hundreds of cases without a single failure.

Dr. Hamilton's Anti-Pill. It is sold at 50c. by all druggists, or The Wilson-Fyfe Co., Ltd., Niagara Falls, Ont., Sole agents for Canada. 109

TAR AT THE BAR.

It's like this here, Your Honor, see, As true as I can tell,
A gentleman hired my board, and he
Was quite a proper swell.
He brought a bottle home with him
To make a longish trip,
And so we sampled her thoroly—

Judge—The lady?
Tar—No! The ship!

At last we put to sea again,
And started for the west,
Ale spick and span, without a stain,
When all at once, I'm blest,
Her bilge I've found to be leaky,
Which quite upset the trip.
The water washed her waist-high—

Judge—The lady's?
Tar (nodding)—And the ship's.

That's all, I think, Your Honor, now
I'll state to you my case.
Five hundred dollars, you'll allow,
Won't build me up the same.
Her rudder's gone, her mate is broke,
Her flag I've had to dip;
She's lying now upon the shore—

Judge—The lady's?
Tar—No-o-o! The ship!

Weak, Tired People.

NEED NEW BLOOD IN SPRING TO BRING HEALTH AND STRENGTH.

Spring blood is bad blood. It is clogged with impurities that make themselves felt in many ways, such as pimples, and eruptions, poor digestion, occasional headaches, twinges of rheumatism, a lazy feeling in the morning, and a strong desire to avoid exertion. Sometimes the nerves are unstrung, you feel dull and depressed, and your strength is slipping away. You can only be put right by enriching the blood and driving out the impurities. Blood and nerve pills—they only make you weaker. What you need is a tonic, and the best tonic that medical science has yet discovered is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills actually make new, rich red blood, brace the nerves and bring health and energy to sad and despondent and weakly people. Mrs. Chas. Blackburn, of Medford Station, N.S., says:—"For the past ten years Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine I have taken when I found I needed medicine. Last spring I was ailing very much, was weak, easily tired and depressed. I got three boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and they made me feel like a new woman. They are the best medicine I know. They make rich blood if you need it."

If you need a medicine this spring—and there are few people who do not—take the full course of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and you will find an improved appetite, new health and new strength such as no other medicine can give. Be sure to get the genuine. The blood these pills will not cure. Avoid substitutes, they make the poor, rich blood that drives disease from the body. The genuine Pink Pills have the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around each box. Sold by medicine dealers or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Fred Membery's Letter.

Chicago, Ill., April 10th, '05.

Dear Beaver,—The weather still continues delightful, and the grass in Washington Park is coming on green, and the ravines' forest trees of Illinois are circling a plain in the centre for all outdoor sporting games, is wearing a thick coat of velvet three inches high, and the leaves of the trees are beginning to form a shade, I noticed an elm tree planted by Edward, Prince of Wales, in 1879, quite near a large fountain and reservoir in the park, that measures in circumference at the base of the trunk four feet 6 inches, and circumference at the same point 7 feet, I should think this tree about 30 feet high and four feet through, brought there of course for the purpose. The date attracted my attention, and that to-day was just one month previous of our quitting the use of tobacco for all time in the future, 18th Dec., 1879.

Time tries all things, and as Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup has stood the test of years it now ranks as a leading specific in the treatment of all diseases of the throat and lungs. It will loosen and subdue the most stubborn cough by relieving the irritation, and will cause the affected organs to healthy conditions. Use will follow its value. Try it and be convinced of its efficacy.

"I have a question for you," said the fruitful young man.

"Turn it loose," replied the fair one as she shifted her chocolate from one cheek to the other.

"If," said the B. Y. M., "you thought of another fellow what you think of me, would you marry him?"

When the other fellow asks me," answered the fair chocolate-eater, "I'll let you know by post card."

To Know is to Prevent.—If the miner who works in cold water most of the day would rub their feet and legs with St. Thomas' Electric Oil they would escape muscular rheumatism and render their nether limbs proof against the ill effects of exposure to the cold. Those setting out for mining regions would do well to provide themselves with a supply before starting.

He—And why do you think I am a poor judge of human nature?

She—Because you have such a good opinion of yourself.

"I ain't really crying," maintained Johnnie, stoutly.

"What are you doing then?" asked his uncle.

"I'm only letting my eyes leak for fun," he whimpered.

They Never Knew Failure.—Careful observation of the effects of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills has shown that they act immediately on the diseased organs of the system and stimulate them to healthy activity. There may be cases in which the disease has been long-standing and does not easily yield to medicine, but even in such cases these pills have been known to give relief when all other so-called remedies have failed. These assertions can be substantiated by many who have used the Pills, and medical men speak highly of the qualities.

The elderly maiden had recently invested a 6d0 acre farm.

"For the land's sake!" exclaimed the gaily old girl.

A Purely Vegetable Pill.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are compounded with the roots, herbs and solid extracts of known virtue in the treatment of liver and kidney complaints and all diseases due to the system whether enfeebled by overwork, deranged blood or careless living. They require no testimonial, their excellent qualities are so universal that those who have used them and tried common remedies in disappointment and those subject to billiousness who are in need of a beneficial medicine.

A small Scotch boy was to give evidence against his father. The Magistrate said to him:

"Come, now, my man, speak the truth, and let us hear all you know of this affair."

"Weel, sir, dae you ken the road wharf?"

"Yes."

"Weel, when you turn the corner you gang up the High street?"

"Yes, my boy, you're very clever."

"Well, you gang on till you come to a pump."

"Yes, yes; I know it well."

"Weel, you can gang and pump it, for you'll no pump me!"

And the boy departed.

"Mamma," remarked Dottie, "if I get married when I grow up will I have a husband like papa?"

"I suppose so, dear," said mamma.

"An' if I don't get married I'll be a old maid, won't I, mamma?" "Well, I s'pose I will, yet. Why?"

"O, nothin'—only I wish I was a boy!"

"That there is some excuse," replied the freshman, "for its getting full so regularly."

LINES TO A SKELETON

Fifty years ago the London Morning Chronicle published a poem entitled "Lines to a Skeleton," which excited much attention. Every effort, even to the offering of a reward of fifty guineas, was vainly made to discover the author. All that ever transpired was that the poem, in a fair, clerky hand, was found near the skeleton of remarkable beauty of form and character, of the students of the Royal College of Surgeons, Lincoln's Inn, London, and that the Curator of the museum had sent them to Mr. Perry, editor and proprietor of the Morning Chronicle, to say that the author of the London Morning Chronicle, who published it, offering fifty guineas in the vain attempt to find out:—

"Beneath this rude bust wears a skull
Once of ethereal spirit full;
This tarnish'd veil was of the richest,
This spare was thought's mysterious nest;

What beauteous visions filled this spot
What dreams of pleasure long forgot!
Nor hope, nor joy, nor love, nor fear,
Have left one trace of record here.

Beneath this mouldering canopy
Once shone the bright and busy eye;
But start not at the dismal void!
If social love that ne'er expired,
If with no lawless fire it gleamed,
But, through the dews of kindness beamed,—
That eye shall be forever bright,
When sun and stars are sunk in night,

Within this hollow cavern hung
The ready, swift, and tuneful tongue;
If falsehood's honey it disdained,
And when it could not praise was chained;
If bold in virtue's cause it spoke,
Yet gentle concord never broke;
This silent tongue shall plead for thee,
When time shall be no more.

Say, did these fingers delve the mine,
Or with its envied rubies shine?
To vile dust from whence they sprung,
Can little new avail to them.
But if the page of truth they sought,
Or comfort to the mourner brought,
These hands a richer meed shall claim
Than all that wait on wealth or fame.

Avails it, whether bare or shod
These feet the path of duty trod?
If from the bowers of ease they fled,
To seek affliction in her shed;
If grandeur's guilty bribe they spurned,
And home to virtue returned,—
These feet with angels' wings shall vie,
And tread the palaces of the skies."

The sweet songs of the spring birds denote that spring has once more arrived.

Our cheese factory began on the 3rd of April, with a good supply of milk. The outlook for cheese at present is good. It is hoped it will continue the season through.

Our village band had an invitation on Wednesday evening last to the home of Mr. Robert Ashworth, to eat maple sugar. They say they had a good time and all enjoyed the sugar very much.

The boys say they will never forget the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Ashworth and Mrs. Aylsworth. The girls say they like the boys best when they have moustaches; they seem to be so much sweeter.

They had another invitation to play for the Public Library concert on Saturday evening, and had another feed of sugar in the town hall. The concert was a good one. The programme was up to date in every respect, and lots of sugar. They gave our band great praise for the nice pieces they played.

Maple sugar has not been very plentiful this spring, a tendency poor sugar weather.

RESOLUTION.

To Bro. Chas. Lochhead and family.—

We, the officers and members of Centreville L. O. L. No. 776, wish to express our sincere sympathy for you and family in your recent sad bereavement, in the loss of your beloved little daughter, who has gone to be with Him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Little Marion was a bright, beautiful child, loved by all who knew her, but for some purpose God called her to His rest. We feel that anything we can say is but small, but Christ, the man of sorrows, can heal the broken hearted and comfort those who mourn, for we sorrow not as those that have no hope. May God bless you in your time of affliction. Signed on behalf of the Lodge,

A LANDMARK GONE.

Word was received by friends in Napanee last Monday that a well known resident, Mrs. Thomas Grange, had died at Port Arthur on Sunday, 16th April, aged eighty-seven years. Mrs. Grange, or "Aunt Betsy," was one of the oldest and best known residents of Napanee and the Township of Richmond, having settled on a farm north of Napanee over half a century ago. Until a few years ago she resided on the farm, after her husband's death, when she came to Napanee. Last November she gave up housekeeping, and went to Port Arthur to reside with her daughter, Mrs. Thomas Roberts. She leaves two children, Mr. Hugh Grange, Syracuse, N.Y., and Mrs. Roberts. Mrs. Grange was a faithful member of the Presbyterian church from its inception here, a genuine Christian, and beloved by all who had the privilege of her acquaintance.

"SHIPPITS FOR A LIVING."

The last of the series of Collegiate lectures was given in the Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute last Friday night, by Prof. Gandy's literarily. The attendance was fairly good, and those present were treated to one of the most interesting and instructive lectures they had listened to in years. Mr. M. C. Bogart presided. The lecture was a surprise to many, who expected it would apply particularly to the human species. However, it related to the lower creation of animals, and showed in the desperate fight for existence and food, what wonderful expedients they adopted to protect themselves from harm and deceive those they preyed upon. The lecture was illustrated by lime-light views of the close, a vote of thanks to Prof. Knight was moved by Mr. Burrows and Mr. Flath. Prof. Knight will be given a warm welcome should he at some time in the future favor us with another of his interesting lectures.

AN OLD FAVORITE.

Harry Lindley, an old time favorite with Napanee audiences, assisted by a first class company, is billed for the Opera House three days next week, Thursday, Friday and Saturday April 27-28th. He played last week in Picton, and the Gazette gives him the following send-off: "There is this to be said of Harry Lindley, who is probably the oldest recognized comedian on the stage, dating as he does as a captain in the Confederate service, that whatever he produces is characterized by clean and wholesome sentiment and purity of tone and as a result ladies and children constitute the bulk of his audience. The company's production of Divorce is worthy of a Metropolitan Theatre and starting out with a heroic and finishing with the servant there is not a weak spot, whilst the veteran comedian in the comedy role is simply perfection, and with his daughter Mystic gives one of those burlesque sketches which keep the audience in roars. Mr. Walter B. Woodall is a handsome jeune premier and obtains hearty recognition by his polished easy manner and dramatic ability. In fact, every member of the company is exceptionally good. Miss Flint, the leading lady, deserves more than special mention for her toilettes as well as her acting. Mr. Lindley to-night promises one of his negro impersonations.

TAKEN ILL ON THE HIGHWAY.

Word was received on Monday that Mr. Nathan A. Caton, agent for the L. & A. Insurance Co., was very ill at Northbrook. Mr. Caton was in the back country in the interests of the company. Last Saturday, when about twenty-five miles north of Northbrook, his horse was discovered standing at the side of the road. Further inspection showed Mr. Caton in the bottom of the buggy, he having been seized with a paralytic stroke. He was taken to a neighboring house and cared for, and on Sunday was driven to Northbrook, where he was carefully nursed at the home of Mr. G. W. Shier, and word sent to Kaladar Station, from whence the telegram came on Monday morning. Mr. Caton's condition is critical, his entire right side being paralized, and it was not deemed advisable to remove him to Napanee at present. His daughters, Mrs. Wm. Lott and Miss Caton, took the first train for Kaladar to be attendance on him, and Dr. Mather, of Tweed, was sent for. We trust the stroke is not so severe as reported, and that Mr. Caton will soon recover.

Since the fall of the beautiful on Friday last our weather has been all that could be desired, and seeding is progressing rapidly.

Mr. R. J. Hannah's sale on the 19th was very satisfactory. There were many things to be disposed of, and both the seller and purchaser were well pleased with the exchange. There was a very large crowd of men gathered.

The sympathy of the neighborhood is extended to the family of the late Mr. Richardson Brown, of Chippewa. His funeral service was held in Knox church, and his remains were laid in Centreville vault till further interment in the Orange lodges.

A letter has been received from Mr. Stan Hannah of the safe arrival in Wetaskin, Alberta. He is pleased with the prospects of the country, but not with the balmy breezes of the Northwest.

Mrs. Samuel Patterson, while spending the day with her daughter, Mrs. Ed. Wagar, Enterprise, became very ill and was unable to return home.

The service at Knox church on Easter day was fairly well attended. We are in hopes that the choir will be able to go for rehearsals, and in future render Rev. Mr. Henry good assistance.

CYNTHIA WESTOVER ALDEN

The Romantic Career of an American Woman

The lives of some people are so large, so brimful of action and accomplishment, so pulsing with purpose, so kaleidoscopic and diverse in expression, that a mere outline of their life-story seems more like the record of a dream than a reality. Such a one is Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, founder and President-General of the International Sunshine Society, and whose generous thoughtfulness in "passing on" to others her surplus Christmas gifts was the inspiration of a world-wide society with over 3,000 branches and more than 200,000 members—all constituted to spreading sweetness and the sunshine of kindness.

When Mrs. Alden was a motherless child of four she was taken by her father, an expert geologist, from her native home in Iowa to Colorado. This was when the journey across the Rockies was one of fearful peril, for the hardships of travel were added the constant terror of the Indians.

Her education was under the loving tutorship of her father, who, after teaching her the twenty-six keys to universal knowledge, led her into the mysteries of history and geology. When but a child she rode a broncho with the nonchalance of an Indian; with a revolver at her belt or a rifle slung across her arm she was a sure shot, and was expert with the lasso and bow and arrow. Such a life, so unconventional life she grew up a strong, healthy physically, intelligent, and with fine impulses toward sympathy.

Her hunger to serve humanity was even then manifest. She crawled had been scalped by the Indians; saved the life of a miner who was to be lynched, by standing between the victim and the enraged mob till its fury child; threw herself on a miner's lamp that had fallen near gunpowder and smothered the flames; rescued some snow-bound miners; made a daring rescue ride through the Indian invaders and brought relief from the fort, and many other similar experiences.

The first child in the schools of Colorado, she graduated from the State University. She has made a success in journalism; has written three books, the latest of which is "Money Earning for Women"; done splendid work in music; mastered Spanish, German, Italian and French, and is one of the most popular club women in the country. Mrs. Alden is the wife of John Alden, a lineal descendant of John Alden of "Mayflower" fame.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by W. C. Bloek, at the Department of Agriculture.

NEWBURGH.

The closing literary of the term was held in the High School on Thursday afternoon, the President, Mr. Miller, presiding. There was a fair attendance from the village and the programme was one of the best of the year. The girls' choir rendered two excellent choruses. The closing chorus, "Good Night, Farewell," was sung, the solo being taken by Miss Anna M. Sutton. A feature of the programme was an impersonation of an English lady, "Mademoiselle Modiste," by Miss Higgs. Her recitation on "Sowing dead boy" was exceedingly pleasing. The vocal part of the programme consisted of a duet by Misses Alda Switzer and Agnes Clarke and a solo by Miss Bessie Warren. The instrumental part was contributed by Misses Helen Hicks, Pearl Brown, Maggie Mitchell, Pearl Patterson, Juanita Thompson, Ethel Mann and Messrs. Gerson Percy Patterson and Mr. Millar, Violin. Prof. Switzer, who presided at the Principal, Mr. Nesbitt, Mr. T. A. Dunwoody, Mr. Henry Mann and Mr. G. A. Aylesworth. The remarks of the last two were short and to the point. Not only was the programme of the afternoon covered, but also a large part of the work of the society, in which all who have been connected are heartily thanked.

Sudden indeed was the summons that came to Miss Jennie, second daughter of Mr. James Johnston, on Friday morning. Though a delicate girl, yet she was able to attend the High School. On Thursday she started to go to the factory at the High School, but the effort was too much however, and she returned. The next evening at a neighbor's. On Friday evening she was being raised up in bed, she felt back a corpse. The shock was great, not only to her parents but to all who knew her. She was a bright little girl of 13 years, diligent at her studies, faithful and punctual at her Sunday School. Her funeral was very solemn and impressive, but so it proved, and the hundreds of people who had been made for Easter was dwelled to be postponed for a week. The funeral took place in the Presbyterian church on Monday afternoon. Rev. J. Gandier preaching an excellent sermon from "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away—Blessed be the name of the Lord." Mr. Dunwoody, superintendent of the Sunday School, also paid a few remarks. The floral tributes were beautiful and numerous, among them being wreaths from the P. H. & E. staff and students, the Presbyterian Church and Sunday School, of which she had been a member of C. D. Finkle's Carriage Factory, Mr. and Mrs. Finkle and family extending their sympathy of their many friends in their hour of bereavement.

The services in the various churches on Sunday were very bright and inspiring. The Easter services were celebrated in St. John's church at 8 a.m. and 11 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Henry officiating. A large congregation attended the evening service at 7 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Cliffe preaching the sermon. The choir sang "Lift up, O Gates", the solos being taken by Mrs. G. H. Finkle, Miss Burton and Mr. Millar. Miss Jessie Millar assisted in the musical service with violin obligato. The Easter service at the Sunday School in the Presbyterian church, and a large congregation attended the evening service. The prelude to the service in the Methodist church on Sunday evening there was a service of song in which Rev. Mr. Wallace took part, and Mr. J. P. Mears preached on "The Resurrection." The choir rendered the anthems "Jesus Lives" "Crown Him with Many Crowns" and "Hallelujah Chorus" The solos being taken by Miss Bessie Mann and Mr. McNeill. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers.

The meeting of the W. M. S. in the Methodist church on Friday evening was well attended, and proved very interesting. Mrs. Wallace gave an interesting address on the "Edmonton Synod" and other points under the direction of Mrs. Gandier. The solos were sung. The report of the year was read by Mrs. G. D. Thomson. The society had thirty-one members on the roll this year, and sent $80.46 to the branch treasurer. The Easter thankoffering amounted to $21.50. Mrs. Wallace presided.

Darling broke into C. H. Finkle's office on Sunday evening, but got nothing. The safe was open and empty as well, but the visitors went through every compartment of the safe and the desk as well. But there was no plunder there and they departed. There is no trace of the thieves.

YOUNG—AMEY.

Miss Bata Young, Sillsville, and Mr. Ernest P. Amey, Glenelive, Montana, were quietly married on Wednesday, 19th April, by Rev. W. H. Emsley. Immediately after the ceremony they took the train for their future home in the far West. A number of her friends and members of the Methodist church choir, assembled at her home some weeks ago, and presented her with a silver sugar bowl, spoon and cream set, together with the accompanying address:

Dear Bata—As you are about to take your departure from amongst us shortly, we, your friends and neighbors, have assembled here tonight to present you with this slight token of remembrance, which we hope will always serve as a pleasant reminder of the scenes and associations of your girlhood's days. When you have taken up your abode in a distant land, among strangers, and when years have estranged and time dimmed these now familiar faces, it can never fail to impress your memory with a thought of the ones who so kindly contributed toward it and who wish you all happiness and God-speed in your journey on the new life that is now about to open up before you.

Signed in behalf of your Sillsville friends.

Sillsville, March, 1905.

Miss Young replied in a most appropriate manner.

PASSED IN COMMITTEE.

As briefly noted in last week's issue, the private bill before the Ontario Legislature, to relieve Napanee from the operation of the Conmee Act, passed the Private Bills committee, practically unanimously, there being only one dissentient. This practically settles the matter, as in the face of such a unanimous decision, there is little or no chance of opposition in the House.

The result is largely a practical testimony to the popularity of Mr. T. G. Carscallen, the member for Lennox, and the thoroughness with which preparations for the hearing were made. The attendance at the Committee was the largest seen during this session, and the members were evidently well informed in advance of the merits of the case.

W. S. Herrington, K.C., Solicitor for the Town, presented the matter to the Committee in a concise but masterly way, presenting the facts with such tact and clearness that it was so apparent that he had carefully familiarized with him, that C. C. Robinson, Esq., Solicitor, of Toronto, who was associated in the case, considered it unnecessary to add anything to what had been said.

D. D. Preston, K.C., appeared for the Gas Company, but put up a strong plea for delay. He certainly made the best of the position, but the Committee was against him.

The Chairman stated very clearly the intention of the Legislature in passing what is known as the Conmee Act—to protect the investments of bona fide shareholders who were faithfully discharging their obligations to the public; but it was never the intention to allow municipalities at the mercy of companies, who failed or neglected to discharge their obligations in giving the people reasonable service. He thought the Town of Napanee was entitled to relief and the Committee supported him fully with one lone exception, who weakly said "but."

The bill was reported without amendment and will go to the House for its final stages in due course.

The Council purpose taking steps promptly for the submission of a by-law to position to the people for a Municipal electric light plant. Plans and specifications are to be prepared upon which may be based a reliable estimate of the cost of the plant, and a by-law will be submitted to the people, asking for the issue of debentures for the amount.

The town is fortunate in having Council this year that "does things" and the electric light question may now be said to be fairly solved.

A "WHEEZY" CHEST.

Means your trouble is deep seated. To delay is dangerous. All the inflammation will be drawn out in one day by applying Nerviline. It penetrates through the pores of the skin, relieves inflammation and thus prevents serious consequences. For sore throat, weak chest and tendency to colds, no preparation has been found to equal Nerviline. For nearly fifty years it has been Canada's favorite home remedy. Twenty-five cents buys a large bottle.

VERSE PAID DUTY.

Plattsburg, N.Y., April 24.—A small parcel was taken from the mail market-ed "Suspected" and "Examined and passed," and turned over to the United States customs officials in the regular order of business, one day last week. The parcel was put on the Canadian train after the route between Montreal and New York City, but only marks on the package to indicate its destination were the following family lines, plainly typewritten in the Canadian dialect:—

Peter's caught out a baby's coat with-in;
To charge it duty wad be a sin;
It's no mony days sin he cam' doon
An' stained out his claim in yon auld toon,
What we wish him noo the best o luck.

The customs officials "peeped" inside, their investigation showing that the contents were as stated, and the package was duly sent on its way, reaching the first mail. It will reach the "wee lairnie" in time for Easter. The package was mailed at Montreal.

SYMPTOMS THAT INVITE GERMS.

LITTLE AILMENTS THAT SHOULD BE LOOKED AFTER IF ONE WANTS TO KEEP WELL.

Anyone who has any of the many symptoms caused by poor digestion should take special care to avoid conditions where disease germs are likely to be present. Extreme thinness is the most common indication of a weak stomach, but any of the following symptoms are also good evidence of stomach troubles:

Uneasiness at stomach	Confusion of mind
Acidity	Flatulency
Water-brash	Heartburn
Spitting up of food	Nausea
Colic	Gripes
Sensation of weight or heaviness at pit of stomach	Coated tongue
	Sour taste in the mouth
Sore mouth	Diarrhœa
Constipation	Dry skin
Sediment in urine	Nervousness
Night sweats	Sick headache
Headache	Congestion of the head
	Vertigo or dizziness
Cold hands and feet	Drowsiness
Pain under shoulder blade	Sleeplessness
	Palpitation of the heart
Pain between shoulders
Defects of vision or hearing.

These little ailments, which indicate a weak stomach and imperfect digestion, should be looked after by the use of Mi-o-na, if one wants to keep well. A tablet of this remarkable remedy, taken before each meal, will so strengthen the stomach and digestive organs that natural weight will be restored and perfect health and strength regained.

THE TERROR OF THE SEA.

In "The Terror of the Sea" in the March McClure's, F. A. McKenzie recounts the awful toll taken by the deep-sea monsters in the Arctic waters of the sea.

Counting the Atlantic has become a commonplace, but, lest we forget, the vast power and the mystery of the sea have yet true tales of the perils that beset the mariner, and of the marvelous fates that have overtaken stout ships, all within the memory of the youngest sea-captain.

These stories of great ship's found, not once but many times, silent and lonely in mid-ocean, with all sails set and everything in its place, everyth ng ready for the voyage, the whereabouts of the crew all a mystery, having no trace ever to be heard of again. These stories chill the blood and, though they are true, they give a sharper thrill than fiction.

Fred Membery's Letter.

Chicago, Ill., April 17th, '05.

Dear Beaver,—Ringlings' Circus and menagerie is now here at the Coliseum at 16th st. and Madison,—a large building for the purpose. It has been going on for the 3d and will continue till the 23d. I attended Saturday to see if there were not three shows in one, and said to one of the showman, "This show will be the greatest country show as you see it, only all the animals are not here yet," I said. "You winter in Wisconsin always." "Yes" he said. "Our performances are new and grand, especially the trapeze performers are extra good. Three rings, over one hundred and sixty horses, and a band of many men. Twenty-one elephants, one of them performing at once, and the best trained elephants that I ever saw. There is also ten large lions and as many cubs, a Polar bear, an African giant grizzly bear and other bears, 6 tigers, hyenas, wolves, rhynoceros, hippopotamus, and numerous other wild animals. A cage full of Japanese apes, the eastern class of performers, etc. So there is a big show coming.

I had a ride in an auto car the past week which cost $7,000, and will run sixty miles per hour. They are nearly all auto cars here, in fact, I never saw one in Toronto as nice as the poorest one here, and a great many of them are made in Racine, Wisconsin.

The strike is still existing with the Union teamsters against Montgomery, Ward & Company, and the major so far is unable to settle their grievances. Non-Union men are in many of their lives here if they take jobs, and to join the Union one is to put water all the time. So the labor field is a hard one to handle with all the big pay and short hours.

Since my last letter I have been through Swift's slaughter and packing house. I noticed that they are (or was) to kill cattle for the Jewish trade, in another room, and they have a sledge hammer for knocking down, but not knocking out. Rope is slipped over the head with a slip noose, so as to choke the beast, when the side door in the slaughter room is open, and the door is lowered on its head, making it impossible for it to kneel. A rope is slipped on one hind leg, the door raised off of the floor and the beast hoisted up by the hind leg and dropped down again. The butcher sat on the floor shoulders, neck and head. A nose muzzel was put on, which fits down over the nose and pried back to make the throat tight, unconscious, and in that position the old Rabbie Jew comes with a long knife and with one draw across the animal's throat severs all to the bone. With blood rushing out and the animal with the most hideous noises and moans is helped to its feet by one end in the state, bleeding, roaring and kicking for a few moments, when consciousness of his fate for half an hour, hanging by death comes to his rescue. The most barbarous way of killing beasts that I ever saw, but upon inquiring I found the Jewish Rabbies were killed that way for the Jewish trade, as they will not eat meat if not killed that way, nor will they send their own man to our slaughter to see that they are killed in that way. Jews must be cruel devils. Jesus Christ, the Messiah, was a Jew born in Swift's slaughter house, and I have seen many a sheep and lambs are killed by two others.

The President is up on Southern Rockies, hunting bear. He has already killed a mountain lion, and killed a rattlesnake six feet long with 14 rattles, eighteen inches long. The bear story, we believe, is a make story, we believe, to be a newspaper sensation. The President, he is held in truthfulness to be equal to his predecessor, General Washington, who never told a lie.

A CONFIDENTIAL CHAT.

It's perfect nonsense, Bessie, for you to talk of being laid on the shelf. Why, it all depends on yourself. Forget your worries, your aches and ailments; do as I did, take plenty of out-of-door air, cultivate happiness by not allowing your mind to dwell on the trifles and the worries of life. I sent fifty one-cent stamps to Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., for his 'Common Sense Medical Adviser,' and found it contained much useful information about the care of my health, about physiology, anatomy, and everything a woman should know. I then decided to write Dr. Pierce and tell him all about my ailments. I received such a nice, carefully considered and confidential letter, in reply, giving me advice about my diet, exercise and all. This advice is free to everyone and I wonder you don't write him at once. It didn't take me many months to regain my good looks. Ever since I was fifteen I have suffered untold agonies periodically but now I am free from pain, worry and bad temper. Occasionally I took Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets—this for the complexion, and to stimulate the liver. Then I took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription three times a day for those womanly weaknesses I told you about. That's my secret of beauty. It's the easiest thing in the world to be happy and keep one's good looks. Look at the thousands of women who have been made well by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; look how they keep their good looks. Dr. Pierce offers $500 reward for any case of Leucorrhea, Female Weakness, Prolapsus, or Falling of Womb which he cannot cure. All he asks is a fair and reasonable trial of his means of cure."

"With Ireland I arranged to hold my tongue, and on his part he promised he would say nothing. The next day the news of the discovery of the body came. Senora Veles, from whom I had borrowed the stiletto, knowing of my love for Percy and being in love with him herself, accused me of the crime. I denied it and said that if she did not hold her tongue I would tell her husband how she had loved Percy. She was afraid of her husband, who was a jealous brute, so she remained quiet. I gave her back the stiletto, which I had obtained from Ireland. We were both safe, but I was so ill that I left the hotel and returned to England. George Bates, who never suspected my share in the death, followed."

It was at this point that George ceased reading. He now knew the worst. His father had died by accident, and Ireland had been the unwitting cause of his death. Brendon wondered how the old man could have carried the knowledge all these years without speaking. He determined to have an interview with him. But at last he knew the truth about the death in San Remo. It inculpated no one, and he could not see how—according to Bawdsey—it could be connected with the murder of Mrs. Jersey.

CHAPTER XXII.

GEORGE read the remainder of Mrs. Jersey's confession and then put it away. Even when he got to the end he could not connect the San Remo crime with that of Amelia square. It was in his mind to see his grandfather and tell the story to him, backed by the production of the confession. But on second thought he decided to see Bawdsey first. He wired for an appointment and received a reply stating that Bawdsey was going out of town at 3 o'clock that day, but would be in his rooms till then. Within an hour George was on his way to Bloomsbury.

On arriving he found that the detective expected him and went to his room. Bawdsey was still in a disturbed state, as he was most anxious to get down the country to help Lola out of her difficulty. He received Brendon irritably and in silence. George saw that the man was all nerves and did not resent his sharp greeting. He sat down and opened the conversation.

"You are going down to see Lola?" he asked.

"Of course. I am much worried over her. She may get into serious trouble over this freak."

"Well, why not tell the judge she is insane at times? Then she will get off lightly."

"Would that be true?" asked the detective, struck by the idea.

"As true as most things. She really is not accountable for her actions when she gets into these frenzies, and in such a one she must have been to attempt the burglary."

"Poor soul! I wonder how she is now."

"Oh, she is not troubled much. Her spirits are as good as usual. She hardly seems to realize the enormity of her offense."

"How do you know?" asked Bawdsey, with a stare.

"Because I saw her last night. After I left you I took the train to Wargrove and had an interview with her."

"You might have told me, Mr. Brendon," said Bawdsey in a peevish tone.

"What would have been the use of that? I can manage my own business, I hope."

"Considering how I love her, it is my business also."

George shrugged his shoulders. "Well, you see, Bawdsey, it was your intention to see Lola first. I guessed as much, so I stole a march on you."

Bawdsey fenced. "I don't see how you can say that."

"I can. You know that Lola was in this house on the night the woman died."

"I presume so, since she got the confession, and she must have secured it to know where your parents were married."

"Well, then, knowing that, you wished to get that confession."

"Yes, I did," said the detective, "and why not? I desired to know if Mrs. Jersey said anything about the San Remo crime in it."

"I can tell you that. She did. I have the confession."

Bawdsey bounded from his chair. "Where is it?" he asked.

"In my rooms, locked away."

"I do call that a shame," grumbled Bawdsey. "You might have trusted me, Mr. Brendon."

"Might I? Would you have trusted me?"

"I do. You know I do."

"To such an extent as suits yourself. But would you have shown me that confession had it come into your possession?"

"You are not showing it to me," said Bawdsey evasively.

"That is not an answer. But I'll show you the confession whenever you like. Come, now, would you have shown it to me?"

"Since you have read it, why ask me that question?" snapped the detective.

"You know"—

"Yes, I know that you would have burned that document. I know that to have a paper in existence which sets forth that Mr. Bawdsey's true name is George Bates is not to your liking. You are George Bates?"

Bawdsey shrugged his shoulders. "There is no use denying it," he said. "You have my letter of identity, writing."

"Was Mrs. Jersey really your wife?"

"She was. We married soon after we left San Remo. She was hard up or she would not have married me."

"And you went to the States?"

"We did. There I took the name of Jersey and tried a variety of things, none of which came to any good. Then I left Eliza."

"Why did you do that?"

"Because she was a devil," said Bawdsey, his face lighting up. "I tried all the means in my power to make her happy, but she was always quarreling and nagging at me because I said she had not married that Vane—your father, Mr. Brendon."

"Did she tell you about the murder?"

"It was not a murder," protested Bawdsey. "No, she did not tell me, but from a hint or two she dropped about getting money from Mr. Ireland I guessed that he had something to do with it. I came across to England, and I saw him. He told me the whole story."

"Did you get money from him?"

"I did not. I am an honest man, although you do not seem to think so. I left all that blackmailing to my wife. She came over to get money out of Ireland. He simply said that he would tell the whole truth and call the woman Veles as a witness about the dagger."

"But that woman is dead?"

"Oh, no, she isn't," said Bawdsey coolly. "Lola told me that she was alive and still in San Remo. She could have made things very hot for my wife. But, failing Eliza, my wife—Mrs. Jersey, we will call her—had another string to her bow. She heard how Lord Derrington denied the marriage, and how you were living with your grandfather Lockwood. She went to Derrington and"—

"I know the rest. And you came to live in this house."

"Not at the time. I went back to the States, but as I could do nothing there I returned to England. Then I took up the detective business and called myself Bawdsey. I came to see my wife. She would not let me call myself her husband, and, as I had no great liking for her, I agreed. I was in this house for a few weeks, and then I got my own diggings. I saw as little of Mrs. Jersey as was possible."

"Why was that?"

"Well, sir," replied Bawdsey frankly, "I didn't hold with the annuity she was getting."

"In a word, you disapproved of the blackmail?"

"That's a good, useful word, sir," said Bawdsey neatly. "Yes, I did. I never would take a penny from her, and when I lived here during the few weeks I paid my board. Yes, sir, I'm an honest man."

"I am convinced you are, Bawdsey, and I apologize for my suspicions. But in some ways—eh?"

"I didn't act very straight, you mean. Well, sir, I fancied, seeing what you know, that you might suspect me of killing her."

"No, Bawdsey. As you have acted so fairly all through, I am convinced that you are innocent on that score. But we know that the San Remo crime was connected with the death of Mrs. Jersey?"

Bawdsey opened his eyes. "Can't you see, sir? The stiletto."

"Oh, you mean that the weapon used by Lola was the same one as my father was killed with?"

"Certainly, Mr. Brendon. It belonged to Senora Veles, the mother. She gave it to Lola, for I saw it in her rooms before the death of Mrs. Jersey, and I recognized it from the description given by my wife."

"Then there are dozens of stilettos like that one. Lord Derrington showed it to me."

"Yes, that's true enough, but, you see, from what my wife told me, I knew that she had got the dagger from the woman Veles. It wasn't hard to see when I dropped across a similar weapon in the room of a woman also called Veles that it was the same. Now you see how it is that Lola knew so much about the death of your father and how she and I came to talk of the matter."

"How did you drop on the subject in the first place?"

"The name was enough for me. I saw Lola, and I fell in love with her, as you know. Then I remembered the name Veles and got an introduction to her. One thing led to another until I knew the whole story, and I admitted that the stiletto was the one with which Mr. Vane had been killed."

George thought for a few minutes. "Tell me, Bawdsey," he said at length, "did you suspect Lola of committing the crime?"

"Yes, sir," admitted Bawdsey frankly. "You see, she has a devil of a temper. I never knew that she had come to see Mrs. Jersey on that night, although I might have guessed it because of the way she tried to learn the whereabouts of the house."

"You mean the crimson light? Her excuse was foolish I thought the other day when you stated it," said George. "But when did you first suspect her?"

"When I picked up the stiletto I recognised it at once. It was my intention to take it round to her, so that she should not be incriminated, but I was so upset—as I said the other day—that I forgot all about the matter. When I did think it was too late, for Derrington woke up and put on his coat. I wondered whether he would mention the stiletto to me, but he never did."

"Because he knew nothing about it," said George. "Mrs. Ward stole it, as I told you."

"Oh, I see how it is now. But I realized I did suspect Lola. I asked her if she was in the house. She said that she had been, although she denied it at first."

"How did you bring her to confess?"

"I threatened to identify the stiletto. Then she told the truth—if it was the truth," said Bawdsey.

"Oh, I think so. I don't believe she killed the woman. Since she had got what she wanted—the confession—there was no sense in her committing a murder. No, I quite believe that she threw the dagger at Mrs. Jersey's feet, as she said."

Bawdsey scratched his head. "I wonder who did kill Eliza," he muttered. "If Lola is innocent and I am innocent." He looked at Brendon.

"I can't help you," replied George, rising. "The thing is quite beyond me. It must have been some one in the house."

"No," replied Bawdsey positively. "Remember Mr. Train heard a door close—the front door—some time about half past 11."

"That was you, was it not?"

"No, sir. I did not arrive till close on 12, and Mrs. Jersey was already dead. The door must have been opened and closed by the murderer, and he left just before I arrived."

"But how could he have entered? You alone had the latchkey. As to Lola, she slipped in while Mrs. Jersey was dismissing her guests."

Bawdsey shook his head. "I can't understand it, sir. Of course there was another gentleman who had the house for a short time." He looked meaningly at Brendon.

George looked puzzled. "What do you mean?" he asked.

"Well, sir," began Bawdsey, with his invariable formula, "I don't like to mention names, and I am sure what I say will go no further, but there is Mr. Ireland"—

Brendon started to his feet, with an agitated face. "Ireland! Oh, no, that is impossible," he declared, "quite impossible! Why should he have a latchkey?"

"After your grandfather's death he was in possession of the house for a time, and the keys would be with him. In handing them to Lord Derrington he might have forgotten one."

"It's improbable!"

"I don't think so. It was a chance, I think, at first, but I am now inclined that Mrs. Jersey occupied the house he might have found the latchkey useful to see her when he felt inclined. I know say she tried to get money out of him again."

"But he refused her."

"He did—once," said Bawdsey meaningly, "but Mr. Ireland was not as young as he had been and dreaded lest his—accident should be known. I'm sure Mrs. Jersey would let him know that she was just round the corner. She always kept in touch with useful friends."

"But why should he kill her so suddenly?"

"Well, he might have heard that she had written out a confession, or even about Lord Derrington's visit. And then he would come round to ask her if she had incriminated him in her confession. He would ask her for a sight of it. Not having it, for she found the blue envelope empty after Lola left, she would deny that she had it. Then, in a fury, Ireland would be on the table. What was more natural than for Ireland to pick it up and kill her in a sudden feeling of dread?"

"It strikes me that if he struck the blow he had a great deal of nerve," said George dryly. "But you go on a lot of suppositions. I do not believe Mr. Ireland had anything to do with the matter."

"Then who had?" asked the detective.

"What would you say to Margery?"

"What, the niece—that half witted girl?"

"Exactly. Half witted. She is more like an animal than anything human. She gets these sudden fits of rage. When Miss Bull fainted Margery rushed in and threatened me with her fists. Seeing what an uncontrollable temper she had, it occurred to me that she might have killed her aunt."

"I did suspect Lola," said Bawdsey, "that the aunt locked the girl in her room."

"Of course, but Miss Bull may know the truth and may be shielding Margery. What if Mrs. Jersey found Margery down the stairs after Lola was gone and instead of rebuking her as Miss Bull said in the passage"—

"At 11 o'clock, mind."

"Later, I think," said George quickly. "You did not arrive till nearly 12, and the woman was just dead."

"I don't think a few minutes would make much difference," said Bawdsey quietly. "But go on, sir. Let me hear your theory."

"Well, I fancy that Mrs. Jersey caught Margery down the stairs and took her into her own room to rebuke her quietly, so that the rest of the house might not hear; also she would be anxious to learn if the girl had overheard her conversation with Lola. If Margery had she would assuredly have told Miss Bull. Mrs. Jersey would be afraid of that, and I dare say she stormed at Margery to make her speak."

"But there could have been no row, sir. No one heard a disturbance."

"I am bound to say I did not hear a disturbance myself," said George reflectively. "Mrs. Jersey may have argued quietly. Then, as you say, the stiletto was on the table. Margery, goaded into action, might with the sudden rage of a dumb animal have"—

"Well, it's not impossible. But about the door closing?"

"When Margery saw what she had done," pursued George, still trying to guess what had taken place, "her first impulse would be to run away. She would steal out and open the door. I am pretty sure Miss Bull was on the watch and saw her. She would draw the girl back and close the door—at half past 11, as Train heard. Then she would pacify Margery and lock her in her bedroom, after previously instructing her what to say next morning. That is what I believe, Bawdsey."

"It's a very pretty case," murmured the detective, "and things might have happened as you say. But if it is the case there is not much chance of learning the truth. Both Margery and Miss Bull will be silent. And, after all, my theory regarding Ireland is just as good, Mr. Brendon."

George rose to go. "Stick to your theory and I'll stick to mine," he said, smiling. "But what about Lola?"

"Well, sir, I'll go down with Kowlaski and see what I can find out. However we can to get her out of her trouble. And you, sir"—

"Oh, I shall have nothing more to do with Lola. Take her back to the States as your wife, Bawdsey, and I will get my grandfather to give you the thousand pounds to start life on."

"It's very good of you, sir," said Bawdsey gratefully. "And you will try to persuade her to marry me?"

"Yes. She knows, as I told her, that, register or no register, my grandfather intends to recognize me as his heir. Therefore she is certain, as she may well be, that I shall marry Miss Ward. She will gradually get over her fancy for me and will be quite content to take you."

"What do you intend to do now, sir?"

"Leave matters alone, Bawdsey. I don't want to learn who killed Mrs. Jersey. Now I know about my father's marriage I shall change my name, take my rightful one and have done with all this crime and mystery. The yellow holly can go hang for me."

CHAPTER XXIII.

AFTER the interview with Bawdsey, George called at St. Giles square and related to his grandfather all he had learned. The old man was much astonished.

"I don't think Ireland was to blame," he said, "not even in holding his tongue. After all, the thing was an accident, although undoubtedly that woman was the cause. Have you seen Ireland?"

"Not yet, but I will soon."

"Then tell him from me that I don't consider he was responsible, and that I quite believe from what I know of Mrs. Jersey that he has told the entire truth."

"I will, sir," answered George. "I suppose you mean that if he really committed the crime with malice aforethought Mrs. Jersey would have blackmailed him."

"That is what I mean. Mrs. Jersey must have been afraid for herself or she would never have kept her claws on Ireland's money."

"I quite agree with you, sir. Poor Bawdsey was honest, however."

"Well"—Lord Derrington did not assent to the remark—"if Bawdsey had been really honest he would have asked me to be silent on the matter, and need not have used threats. No, George, Bawdsey is trying to make as much as he is kept in check. I suppose he will marry the girl?"

"I think so. He is madly in love with her. I promised that you would give him a thousand pounds if he went to America."

"The deuce you did!" said Derrington wrathfully.

"Why not, sir?" rejoined Brendon calmly. "We want him out of our lives. He knows too much. Better send him abroad, so that he may not make any remark about this unpleasant family history."

Lord Derrington winced. However, the old man silently acknowledged the justice of the speech. "You are right," he said. "But Bawdsey ought to do something for his money."

"You mean that he ought to discover the assassin?"

"Yes, I do. Whoever killed that woman should be brought to justice, George."

Brendon looked down. "I think it will be best to let sleeping dogs lie, sir," he said significantly.

"Are you alluding to the possibility of Mrs. Ward having killed her?"

"Yes, sir," George laughed right out. "No, sir. I don't think Mrs. Ward would go so far as that."

"No one would were there no law to restrain her."

"I dare say. She has the instincts of a female despot. But as there is a law she would not jeopardize her neck. No, I mean Ireland."

Derrington sat up. "Nonsense! Do you mean to say he is guilty?"

"I don't think so, but Bawdsey has an idea," and George related the theory of the detective. Derrington grunted in a disgusted manner.

"The man's a born idiot," he said. "Why should Ireland run the risk of getting his neck into a noose for a second crime?"

"But failing Ireland," replied Brendon quietly, "there remains Margery."

"That idiot of a girl! Yes?"

"She would have had reasons for believing Margery's guilt. Again Derrington sniffed. "It's all supposition. If the girl came into the room, if the stiletto were on the table, if Mrs. Jersey scolded her into a fury. Pah! I don't believe it."

"And you really wish to find the assassin?"

"I should like to know, out of mere curiosity. But if it is your opinion that Bawdsey can take his thousand pounds and sail for America whenever he chooses."

After this conversation George took his leave. Dorothy was out of town, so he could not visit her. After the interview with Ireland in Derrington's library he was bound to say I did not hear a disturbance myself," said George reflectively. "Mrs. Jersey may have argued quietly. Then, as you say, the stiletto was on the table. Margery, goaded into action, might with the sudden rage of a dumb animal have"—

"Well, it's not impossible. But about the door closing?"

"When Margery saw what she had done," pursued George, still trying to guess what had taken place, "her first impulse would be to run away. She would steal out and open the door. I am pretty sure Miss Bull was on the watch and saw her. She would draw the girl back and close the door—at half past 11, as Train heard. Then she would pacify Margery and lock her in her bedroom, after previously instructing her what to say next morning. That is what I believe, Bawdsey."

"It's a very pretty case," murmured the detective, "and things might have happened as you say. But if it is the case there is not much chance of learning the truth. Both Margery and Miss Bull will be silent. And, after all, my theory regarding Ireland is just as good, Mr. Brendon."

George rose to go. "Stick to your theory and I'll stick to mine," he said, smiling. "But what about Lola?"

"Well, sir, I'll go down with Kowlaski and see what I can find out. However we can to get her out of her trouble. And you, sir"—

"Oh, I shall have nothing more to do with Lola. Take her back to the States as your wife, Bawdsey, and I will get my grandfather to give you the thousand pounds to start life on."

"It's very good of you, sir," said Bawdsey gratefully. "And you will try to persuade her to marry me?"

"Yes. She knows, as I told her, that, register or no register, my grandfather intends to recognize me as his heir. Therefore she is certain, as she may well be, that I shall marry Miss Ward. She will gradually get over her fancy for me and will be quite content to take you."

"What do you intend to do now, sir?"

so pleased to see the favorite again that she was saluted with cheers. In a few days every one forgot about the matter, which after all did not amount to much.

Luckily it was not stated why Lola had wished to destroy the register. There were several marriage entries on the page, and no one could say which of these she wished obliterated. Besides, Brendon got the magistrate to suppress the book and not let the press report the matter. He accomplished this by telling the magistrate exactly how the matter stood. As judicial authority used his power, and the fourth estate quelled. Everything was settled in a most satisfactory manner.

Later on Brendon had copies made of the marriage entry of Percy Vane, bachelor, and Rosina Lockwood, spinster, and brought them to his grandfather. The old man read them carefully, then laid down the paper with a sigh of relief.

"I never thought I would be pleased to see that in black and white," he said, "but everything in life is strange, and not the least strange thing is that I kick out Walter to make room for you. By the way, George, he will be here soon."

"Have you told him?"

"Yes, and he wants to see you about the matter. I said that he could in my presence. What he has to say I don't know, there is another reason for your remaining, George. Mrs. Ward and her daughter are coming here."

"She won't be pleased to see me," said Brendon.

"Oh, I think she will. After Ireland put her in a corner she grew afraid, and now she would like to see the matter settled at any price. When she is your mother-in-law, George, keep her out of your house or there will be trouble. Ah, here is Walter! Well, my boy, have you come to see your new cousin?"

Walter Vane entered the library with an injured air. He looked neater and more fragile than ever and wonderfully old, considering his years. Derrington looked from him to the fine figure of George with a queer look in his eyes.

"Walter," said George, "I hope you have no grudge for stepping into your shoes."

Walter took the hand in his own limp grasp. "Well, of course, it is hard on a fellow," he answered in a rather whining manner, "but you and I got on well together, so I would rather it was you than another fellow. And what about my income?" asked Walter.

"You will have what you have now," said Derrington. "Don't bother me about the matter. You and George can settle it between you."

Considering how he had been ousted, Walter really took things very calmly. But he had not enough vigor to pro-

A NOBLE BOY.

AMrcd H. Love, of Philadelphia, president of the Universal Peace Union, was talking on the topic, peculiarly congenial to him, of kindness. Said he:

"I once knew a remarkably kind boy. He was a great angler. There was a trout stream in his neighborhood that ran through a rich man's estate. Permits to fish the stream could now and then be obtained, and the boy was lucky enough to have a permit.

"One day he was fishing with another boy when the gamekeeper suddenly darted forth from a thicket. The lad with the permit uttered a cry of fright, dropped his rod, and ran off at top speed. The gamekeeper pursued.

"For about a half-mile the gamekeeper was led a swift and difficult chase. The man seized him by the arm, and said between pants:

"'Else's you a pertnit to fish on this estate?'

"'Yes, to be sure,' said the boy quietly.

"'You have? Then show it to me.'

"The boy drew the permit from his pocket. The man examined it, and frowned in perplexity and anger.

"'Why did you run when you had this permit?' he asked.

"'To let the other boy get away,' was the reply. 'He didn't have none.'

ABOUT RHEUMATISM.

There are few diseases that inflict more torture than rheumatism and there is probably no disease for which such a varied and numerous list of remedies have been suggested. To say that it can be cured is, therefore, a bold statement to make, but Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which enjoys an extensive sale, has met with great success in the treatment of this disease. Upon application of Pain Balm will relieve the pain, and hundreds of sufferers have testified to permanent cures by its use. Why suffer when Pain Balm affords such quick relief and costs but a trifle? For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 14d

SPRINGTIME FLOWERS

LESSON OF DIVINE ENCOURAGEMENT FOR HUMAN RACE.

TWO REVELATIONS OF MAN

The Natural World, So Bright and So Full of God's Purposes in Spring time, and the Internal World, the Bible, Which Both Work for the Same Purpose, the Revealing of God's Love and Care.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dixey, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 23.—The flowers of the springtime furnish the theme of this sermon, and from them the preacher draws a lesson of divine encouragement for the human race. The text is Matt. vi., 28, "Consider the lilies of the field."

"Lilies! Wonder the lilies of the field!" No one can understand what that command means unless that person has attended an Easter service in southern California, as I have done," said a dear friend to me many years ago. "Why, in Los Angeles and Pasadena they do not grow the spring lilies at hothouse plants, as they do in Chicago or New York. They do not look upon the pistil of calla lily as though it were a pencil of solid gold and count eight, or ten, or twelve, or even fifteen dollars per dozen for their ascension lilies. Here they grow almost as plentifully as do the thistles on Scottish moors or the shamrocks on Ireland's hills. There all the ministers have to do to insure Easter decoration for their churches is to ask the members of their congregations to bring in their lilies the Saturday before Easter Sunday. And what is the result? The lilies are brought by the armful and in carriage loads. The only way I can describe their abundance is to compare them to the grass seeds and the bluebells, and the daisies, and the dandelions growing in eastern fields in the summer time. The Easter pulpits are crowded with them. The organ lofts are crowded with them. They hang over the galleries. They entwine themselves about the church columns. The Sunday school rooms as well as the main auditoriums are filled with them. Lilies, lilies, lilies everywhere! Oh, you ought to go to southern California to see the churches decorated with lilies on Easter Sunday! Nowhere is another sight like it!

When my friend spoke thus I was not a skeptic. I did not ridicule her statements. I had never been in southern California at that time, but I had traveled around the world, and I had seen the almost limitless wealth of the wild flora of the tropics. In Honolulu we were, when the friends my wife had came down to greet us with thousands upon thousands of flowers. They enwinded them in our arms' hair and harness. They covered our carriages with them. They placed them in garlands about our necks. They strewed them under our feet in the streets. But notwithstanding my experience in the east I was unable to realize the beauty of an Easter Sunday in southern California until I myself had participated in such a service. No man can appreciate the beauty of a Los Angeles church until he sees there a church building literally covered with pure white lilies. Not a red leaf there. Only the white leaf and the green leaf side by side. The lilies seemed not to be lilies, but great curtains and crosses and columns of white. On my first Easter service the people brought so many lilies for decorating purposes that the ladies could not use them all. Great piles of these white lilies had been thrown away as useless. Why did we not send some of these lilies to other churches? That would have been a foolish waste of time. All the other churches had just as many lilies on hand as we had.

Beautiful and abundant as are the lilies of southern California, appropriate as they are as symbols of Christ's resurrection, I would not limit my thoughts to them on this Easter morning. It was not of such flowers as these alone that Christ referred to when he bade us consider the lilies. The lily of Christ's time was not, as many suppose, like the lily of the western world. It was not the calla lily, with its cornucopia-like long pistil of gold; not the lily of the valley, which looks like a string of bells, ready to ring out the Easter chimes; not the Bermuda lily, with its clapper of white, nor the water lily, lifting its head above the river Nile to be decapitated and pounded into flour.

The modern husbandman makes his wheat. Nor was it the Hulch lily, which Dr. Thompson, the oriental traveler, describes as that much waived softness that the finest silk could not be softer. The New Testament lily was a name given comprehensively to all the wild flowers of Palestine, as the name "sparrow" embraced all the small birds that winged their flight above the Judean hills. Thus, as my Easter text, "Consider the lilies," embraces all wild flowers, I shall not hem in and circumscribe my subject by the beautiful lilies which we find growing in our churches this Easter day. In the symbol of the growth of the wild flower I shall find the most practical and appropriate lesson for this glorious service of Easter morn.

The wild flowers of Palestine, in the first place, teach us that man, insignificant though he is, is nurtured and protected by a divine Father's care, no matter where he may be. They teach us that if God takes the trouble to plant and develop a little wild flower God is certainly willing to care for and do care for us. Luther Burbank, the great "wizard of Abbotsford" was found in a Scottish ravine, down on his knees, with paper and pencil, drawing the construction of the leaf of a wild flower. Burbank was studying the Walter, why are you spending your time thus?" "Ah," answered Sir Walter Scott, "I am studying the love of my Maker for me in his care for this little wild flower. If God is willing to take the time to color this little leaf and place it in veins and arteries as perfect in construction as are the veins of my own body, I, as a man, ought to warm this leaf into life and feed it and give it drink, for if God is willing to care and does care for me, whom he has made in his own image, how much more will he care for this little wild flower." Was not Walter Scott's answer right? Can we not find the love of God best can demonstrated in God's care for the wild flowers? Can we not find the tenderness of God unless he has seen them pictorialised on the leaves of the wild flowers. The great preacher, Henry Ward Beecher, said, "I do not believe that any one can fully read the natural world who does not study it as a child. I am satisfied that no one can read the Bible to the best advantage who does not read the great book of God in nature as well." These things are very much to each other—what blossom is to fruit and what germ is to blossom. One is not the cause of the other helps to produce it. And so these two revelations, the external and the internal, work together and both work for the same purpose.

Can you not see God's love and care for you in the looms which weave together a rose leaf? In the construction of the honeysuckle, which lifts itself above the ground, clambering over the side of a wall or porch in order to reach the light of the sun? Can you not find God's protection hovering over you in the fragile stem of the lily, which guard the wild flower from the reckless feet of an approaching foe? Can you not fathom God's care for you by studying the roots that suck up the nourishment out of the ground and the marvelous chemistry which can gather out of the same black soil the red for the rose, the purple for the violet, the blue for the heliotrope, the lavender for the hyacinth, the pink for the carnation, the white for the lily of the field. Though there are millions and millions of wild flowers every spring and summer, wonderful as the fields may be covered with dandelions and daisies and sunflowers and goldenrod, yet each individual flower gave God's loving care, whether it be the trailing arbutus hiding in the mountains or the sweet mignonette and the bluebells and the forget-me-not and all the trailer floral beauties which are given the deft touches of the horticulturists. If God cares for the inanimate things of this earth, surely God does care for immortal man, for whom Christ was born and Christ died and Christ was resurrected on Easter day. Yes, God does care for you, though you have been as invalid for the last twenty years. He does care for you, though a widow, and seemingly facing a life of financial struggle, with a large brood of little ones at your back. He cares for you, though you seem at this moment not to have a friend in all the wide, wide world. He cares for you, I know it. This Easter day Christ says: "Consider the wild flowers of the fields. As I have cared for the lilies, so I am caring for you, oh, ye of little faith!"

Christ loves the Easter lilies. Therefore he respects the work which these Easter lilies are doing. As he comes out in these lilies he does not bend over a little daisy or a forgetme-not and say, "Oh, insignificant flower, why are you out?" He does not bend over among the flowers or a cedar of Lebanon among the trees in the grove. The birds of the air could come and build their nests among your great branches. Then the great beams of my temple could have been cut out of the trunk of your tree. Then a house could have been erected from your wood and from my carpenter shop in Nazareth." Oh, no. Christ would not speak thus on this Easter day to a drooping lily. He did, the daisy would look up and say, "Oh, risen Lord, why are thou rebuking me? If thou didst respect me as the work of a cedar of Lebanon, why didst thou not make it possible for me to grow into a great tree?"

No, no. Christ honors the wild flower because it is willing to do the work of a wild flower, as we should be willing to do the work for which we were created and not for one of another order. It is the work which it is impossible for us to do. And yet as I wander in and out among these Easter lilies and look at them I find men trying to win the divine commendation, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," by doing the work neglected the work which God has given them to do and have been trying ten, twenty, thirty years to do some work for which they were never fitted. They are not willing to do simple work like that of the wild flowers—the simple, beautifully colored, sweet scented wild flowers. They are always trying for some position they cannot attain. They are always dissatisfied with what they are.

Here is a man who is a good, ordinary, everyday simple preacher. If he would only be satisfied to do the work God has assigned him he would be mightily blessed. But he wants to be a cedar of Lebanon. He wants to be a Savonarola, a Thomas Chalmers or a John Knox. He wants to be one of the great evangelists of the world, and immediately he decides on going over into Manchuria to help the Japanese or the Scotch, or the Welsh, or the Australians. And what is the result? He ruins his life for good, for he is not willing to be a simple wild flower in God's service.

Never despise your humble position in life, because you are like the simple wild flowers. When the second advent comes and Jesus, as the Divine Bridegroom, goes down among the Easter lilies or the wild flowers the Lord will not say unto the multitude of his children: "Are you occupy a great position in life? Were you a noted general, or king, or statesman? Like Hannah More, did you wield a brilliant pen? Did you lighten the sickroom of some invalid when, at my command, the messenger plucked you? Did you breathe out your fragrance upon the coffin lid while the minister uttered the committal, 'Ashes to ashes, dust to dust?' Did you make the marvelous discovery that the color which the young girl plucked you in the fields and with your bright faces decorated lilies which were used in the wedding day? Did you carry the message of love between the angry brothers and sisters that resulted in reconciliation? I made you wild flowers. I loved you because you were wild flowers. As Easter lilies did you love and honor me?"

Another Easter lesson. After we have done our best, then, like the wild flowers, let us trust God that he will do what is best for us. After we have done our best we have no more right to worry about our future than the wild flowers have to worry where they are going to get a drink or from what quarter their daily meals are to come or where they are to find their sunshine or their nights in which to sleep. I find all the more justification in the use of this figure because at times it seems to me that flowers, after all, are not such inanimate objects, but have a certain intelligence of their own. They speak to me at times to be almost human in their desires.

Let us imagine for a moment that the wild flowers can speak. What would you think of a rose which two or three times in a night should wake up, open its petals and begin to cry, saying, "Oh, it is so dark! I cannot see. I wonder if I will ever have the sunbeams again kiss my cheek and make me blush?" Oh, no. That is not the flower's way. The rose says to herself when she hears the angelus tolling in the village: "Now it is time for me to say good night and go to sleep. I have done a useful day's work. I have made my money for a dozen bees. I have made the tired, sick mother, riding by in her carriage, clap her hands for joy and say, 'Oh, what a beautiful rose!' I have been drawn in the picture of a Paul de Longpre. I have well earned my rest. God will make me to live in the morning. He will send to me the sunshine in his own good time. I will now say my prayers and go to sleep and trust him."

What would you think if all the wild flowers on the Jerusalem hills on the morning of the blackest of all Black Fridays in the world's history began to weep and to cry and to beg. Supposing that we should hear them begin to moan: "What is the matter? What is the matter? Why is that great crowd surging forth from yonder gates to crush and trample our petals into the dust? Why is this darkness over the whole earth? It is not yet night. Is the end of the world at hand? O God, why are those rocks swaying underneath us as a cradle would rock under a mother's touch? Why this awful light in the garden on this early Easter morn?" If ever there was a time when flowers could open their lips and speak it must have been then to their Maker and Father. But not with such words would they have broken their silence. I can imagine their greeting as the Saviour stepped among them that morning in the garden of Joseph of Arimathea. Sweet and beautiful must they have looked to him, and I can imagine his saying to them: "Swing your incense, wild flowers. Bring it far and near. Hold high your chalice filled with sweetest of nectar that every passing humming bird may have his fill. And then don't worry, but trust me. Just trust me." And if the wild flowers trust God for food and drink and sleep, cannot we do the same?

The Easter lilies teach us that a short earthly life is not necessarily an unimportant life. Even though our friend ones may have been but a few years, the influence of those years both for them and us may reach on through the eternities. Their lives and our lives may be as short as the shortest lived of the wild flowers, and yet the eternities themselves will never be able to outlive them and us in our heavenly joys. The Easter lily is the symbol of the Christ's resurrection and of our own resurrection through Christ.

But, though man's life, like the lilies, may be very short, his heavenly life, the resurrection life, is very long. Christ was only thirty-three years of age when he was crucified. But Christ is to-day dwelling in heaven with our dear ones who have gone beyond. Mother, by the grave of your little baby, I declare it. Husband, by the grave of your dead wife, believe it. Child, by the casket of your father and mother, welcome this resurrection truth. Our dear ones' earthly lives may have ended, but their heavenly lives have just begun. Then, on this glorious Easter morn will you accept this truth? By placing your hope in Christ. By bidding your trust him as one of the lilies of the field, will you not grasp the promise of a heavenly resurrection?

Could we secure a definite and permanent cure? Men often make a thing ugly first and then cover it up with paint or paste or gilding to make it beautiful, wrote an unknown writer. "God never does so. You will find no sham on his works. The shape he gives to each creature is just that which is fitted for it, and the color with which he adorns it will never wash off. In his great workshop truth and beauty go together." A May morning of the beauty of the truth of the short lived Easter lilies be to us the symbol by which we may learn to trust Christ while we are upon earth and live with him in the glorious Easter which shall be eternal and without end.

Treadmill as a Punishment.

The treadmill is still in vogue at many English prisons. Within the walls is a little building, built of blue-grey stone, standing somewhat apart from the main structures in a corner of the exercise ground and prison garden. On the chocolate-colored door is painted in white letters the two words "Wheel House." As the door opens the dull, grinding sound that we heard outside grows a little louder and clearer. The door closes behind us with the inevitable clash and click of the returning bolt. The house is an apartment some 30 feet long and 15 feet wide. On the left hand side are the wheels, four of them, in two tiers, divided by a gallery running the whole length of the house from end to end. Below is the pit, and a staircase at the opposite end. On the right hand side there is another, lower gallery for the officers, and, as usual, the warder in charge. The wheels are separated by a section of brick wall.

Each wheel is divided into compartments, cutting off each prisoner from the others. The object of this is to prevent the possibility of conversing or hearing one another, although conversation in a low voice, pitched in a different key to that of the "music of the wheel," is perfectly easy and intelligible.

New Beggipes for the Prince.

Gavin Macdonald, of Aberfeldy, Scotland, is making a new set of bagpipes for the Prince of Wales. The pipes will be the finest he has produced, but, as he is an officer of a Scottish regiment, he prides himself upon possessing the finest pipes in the kingdom. The pipes upon which Gavin Macdougall is now at work are made of selected ebony and richly mounted with silver. The Royal arms and the crest of the Prince of Wales are beautifully engraved. The bag is made of the big drone. The silver mountings all over are artistically chased with Scottish thistles. The pipes are mounted in Royal blue and the Duke of Rothesay tartan with silver roses and tassels.

THE HUMAN LINCOLN.

How the Great and Simple Man Would Romp With the Children.

In the quiet of my family lived almost directly across the street from Mr. Lincoln. He had two sons, Robert and Thomas, nicknamed "Tad," who were about the same age as my brother, Dr. Jesse L., and myself. We, with the other boys of the neighborhood, used to gather on Lincoln's corner in the summer evenings and play the usual games of boys until bedtime. Often Mr. Lincoln would romp with us, and seemed perfectly safe in playing jokes on him. There was one prank which never failed to be great sport for us.

The front fence of Mr. Lincoln's delightful home, then and now, was about three feet high and stood on a brick wall which was about five feet high. Almost directly in front of the steps leading up from the sidewalk to the house was a tree planted by Mr. Lincoln himself, which still stands there. At that time it was about eighteen or twenty feet high.

Mr. Lincoln, as I recall, invariably wore a high hat, commonly called a "plug" hat. During the time of his great debates with Douglas and just preceding and after his nomination for the presidency Mr. Lincoln was much preoccupied in mind. When at home he usually went up to the statehouse after his evening meal to consult with his party associates. He was quite regular in his habits and usually came and went at the same hour. These habits were so well fixed that the boys could calculate on his movements, and we tied a string from the tree to the fence in the adjoining yard, behind the wall and around the corner and in various places.

When Mr. Lincoln, with his arms folded behind his back and evidently in deep thought, would be suddenly aroused by having his hat knocked off by some unseen power we would raise a mighty yell, rush out from our hiding places, grab hold of him wherever we could find a place and shout for joy. All his serious thoughts would vanish instantly, and he would laugh and romp with us, and not infrequently march up the street with all the boys clinging around him until he could find a place to buy us some nuts or fruit.

When a boy ten years of age, I was one of the great crowd of his neighbors and friends who assembled at the Wabash depot in Springfield in February, 1861, and heard him bid farewell to his neighbors and friends in a speech tinged with sadness, but with Christian hope.—Senator Dubois in Address at Soldiers' Home in Boise, Ida.

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS SICK?

Let your morning urine stand for 24 hours in a glass or vessel, and then if it is milky or cloudy, or contains a reddish brick-dust sediment, or small particles or germs float about in it, your kidneys are diseased. If the kidneys are well they filter just so much blood, but if they are sick or weak from any cause, they leave the poison in the blood, and this poison affects the entire system.

It is natural to pass urine three times a day, but many who regard themselves as healthy are obliged to get up five six or ten times daily and are obliged to get up frequently during the night. They have sick kidneys and bladder and don't know it. Smith's Buchu Lithia Pills cure Rheumatism and all Kidney and Bladder diseases, and make new, rich blood.

We will send you a generous sample post paid Free, together with our large book on the above mentioned diseases. Address, W. T. Smith Co., 185 St. James Street, Montreal, Canada.

Power of Radium's Heat.

Lord Kelvin has been approached to see whether he is prepared to admit that radium as a widely diffused element of the earth's testing could suffice to account for the long sons during which geologists assert that this planet has existed. His lordship hesitates. He doubts whether it is yet proved that radium gives out for any length of time the marvelous amount of heat which has been recorded during the short period the element has been under observation. If radium does emit this heat, which is by far the most striking property of it, and then the veteran physicist thinks, like Mme. Curie, that it must receive and be constantly receiving energy from some cosmic store, transmitted somehow by ethereal waves. Sir Oliver Lodge thinks this hypothesis has been proven. He in many respects feasible, though, taken all together, unlikely and rather artificial." The subject is altogether one on which it is better to suspend judgment than to theorize at present.—London Telegraph.

Making Rubber in Colorado.

The announcement that rubber has been found in a supposedly useless weed growing on the arid plateaus and high mesa lands of the Colorado mountains and on the rest of the west is of considerable importance. The rubber tree is a product peculiar to the tropics. The newly discovered rubber plant of Colorado, however, grows at an altitude of from 5,000 to 12,000 feet, where the climate holds all the rigors of winter and all the flowers of summer. The discovery of the plant relieves the world's rubber market from its dependence on the tropics and makes it self-supporting. Rubber is become a stable crop even in countries where extreme cold prevails.—The World Today.

Ancient British Stronghold For Sale.

Dunstanburg castle is about to be offered for sale by auction. It was first a British stronghold, then a Roman fortress, and at one time it supplied a garrisoned for Queen Margaret after the battle of Hexham, when it was besieged and taken after an assault lasting three days. The legend of "Sir Guy the Seeker," told in a ballad by M. G. Lewis, is connected with the castle. "Dunstanburg Castle" are crystals found in the neighborhood. A deep chasm in the rock at the east of the castle is known as the "Rumble churn." In stormy weather the sea rushes in, and great clouds of spray are thrown up.—London Chronicle.

The National Capitol.

When the extension now planned for the nation's capitol at Washington has been made the edifice, including its works at the terraces, will have cost nearly $20,000,000. In 1800 the first building lot on which the capitol stands cost $500. The cornerstone was laid with Masonic ceremony, a speech by President Washington, a military procession and a barbecue.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

Mamma—There! You have a black eye and a bloody nose, and your coat is torn to bits. How many times have I told you not to play with that bad Brown boy?

Bobby—Gee, ma! Do I look like we'd been a-playin'?

Great Things From Little Causes Grow.—It takes very little to derange the stomach. The cause may be slight, a cold, something eaten or drunk, worry, or some other simple cause. But if precautions be not taken the simple cause may have most terrible consequences. Many a chronically debilitated constitution to-day owes its destruction to simple causes not dealt with in time. Keep the digestive apparatus in healthy condition and all will be well. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are better than any other for the purpose.

"De small boy," said Uncle Eben, "thinks his father is de best man alive, an' de father thinks his small boy is de smartest little alive, an' bofe boys mighty little to change deir opinions 'mose o' de rest fifteen or twenty years."

A Pleasant Medicine.—There are some pills which have no other purpose evidently than to beget painful internal disturbance in the patient, adding to his troubles and perplexities rather than diminishing them. Those which are well awalow some corrosive material. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills have not this disagreeable and injurious property. They are easy to take, are pleasant to the taste, and their action is mild and soothing. A trial of them will prove this. They offer peace to the dyspeptic.

Henpeck—Yes, sir; he's a wise man all right.

Hyrase—How do you know?

Henpeck—He once had a chance to wed the woman I married, and didn't.

There is no medicine on the market that can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup in expelling from the system the irritating germs that colds engender in the air passages, for it suicide to neglect your cold. Try the cheap experiment of "coding your self off it by using Bickle's Syrup, which is a simple remedy, easily taken and one used it will always be prized as a sovereign medicine.

Rattle—Tell me, Edith, what did you say when Charley proposed?

Edith—Why I said "there's no occasion for me to say anything. Charley had said all that was necessary.

There can be a difference of opinion on most points, but there is only one answer to the reliability of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. It is safe, sure and effectual.

"Look here!" exclaimed the old lady, "I want you to take back that parrot you sold me. I finds that it swears, shamefully."

"Well, madam," replied the dealer, "it's a very young bird; it'll learn to swear better when it's a bit older."

When you recall your boyhood days For little wifie's sake,

Just render credit where it's due,
And don't forget that though
Your dear old mother mixed the bread,
'Twas father made the dough.

"I tell you, golf is going to be the salvation of the nation and slaughter our days by decades."

"What ever made you didn't go in for golf."

"And where are they now? Dead! All dead!"

Grandma—My dear, you know nothing of the battles of life.

Debbie Dante—No? but I hope soon to get into an engagement!

Bobby, in the country—What has that cow got a bell around her neck for?

Sadie—Why, that's what she rings when she wants to tell the cat that dinner is ready.

How's your wife?

Her back troubles her a good deal. Lumbago?

No, she wants a new spring coat.

Doctor—Now, Johnny, stick out your tongue and let me see it.

Johnny—Not on your life. The last time I stuck out my tongue at you I got a lickin' for it.

"Here, take this rifle!" cried the excited show man; "the leopard has escaped. If you find him, shoot him on the spot."

WHAT IT IS.

The Mucous Membrane and the Important Part It Plays in the Health or Sickness of the Body.

The Mucous Membrane is the inside lining of the body, and of all its vessels and organs. The moment this mucous membrane becomes out of condition, even so little, illness follows swiftly, in some form or other.

In ninety-nine cases of a hundred disease has its beginning in some derangement of this Mucous Membrane.

It is very delicate and extremely sensitive, and consequently very liable to disease.

If you are not feeling well you may be sure that the Mucous Membrane of some organ is sick and requires immediate treatment.

There is one medicine that is intended to act, and does act, directly and curatively on the Mucous Membrane. It is Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill.

Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Constipation disappear as soon as Dr. Leonhardt's Anti Pill has restored the Mucous Membrane to its natural healthy condition. Sold by druggists, or all Druggists, or The Wilson-Fyle Co., Limited, Niagara Falls, Ont. Sole agents for Canada.

A new mineral is being mined a short distance east of Amherst. The mineral is sodalite, a pretty colored rock used, when polished, in expensive buildings. The rock is in a regular mountain and can be quarried in very small cost. If it stands the tests, a factory will be built for turning out the finished product.

THE TONIC OF HEALTH.

Must be more than a stimulant—must be a food as well. It must be a medicine that is both a food and a tonic—it aids digestion, promotes assimilation, converts food into nutriment that builds up nerve, blood, brain and bone. That tonic is Perrosone which contains exactly what a run-down system needs. Perrosone supplies oxygen to purify the blood, phosphorous to develop the brain, iron to harden the muscles. No wonder it makes such vigorous men and women. You'll eat, sleep, think and feel better by using Perrosone; try it—now. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty chocolate coated Perrosone tablets, at all dealers.

FARMING IN APRIL.

Up in the morning fore daybreak,
Trudging through mud to the barn,
Hustling to get the cows milked
Before the chickens, mem's to feed.

Carrying the milk to the milk-stand,
Two pails at a time through the mud,
Straining the milk in the can,
Dropping the pails with a thud.

Scaring the boots with a chip,
Washing the face and the hands,
Hurrying into the kitchen
Before there are other demands.

Calling loudly for breakfast
With a wonderful way to this face,
Eating the food with a relish
Nourishing food for the race.

Up from the table and out,
Carrying drink to the swine,
Wishing the day not for distant
When the pigs would be put into brine.

Grooming and feeding the horses,
Hurrying into the kitchen once more,
Doing twenty and one other chores,
Resolving never to do more.

Going to the field to work
Until the dinner horn blows,
Returning in a dripping with sweat,
Dripping with wet the clothes:

Hurrying to the house to dry,
Partaking of another meal,
Fresh eggs, potatoes and pudding,
And a coat of April sun.

Out when dinner is over,
Going up at the sky,
Wondering what's the weather
If it intends to be wet or dry.

Seeing the sun peep out,
Concluding the rain to be over,
Working again in the field
Down comes another shower.

Back to the barn in a hurry,
Planning, meantime, on the way,
If the weather would only be fair
To finish the field the next day;

Greasing and feeding the horses,
Milking, and doing the best
To get through the night chores before dark,
And go to the house to rest.

WHEN SEVEN MEN DIE.

You know at least one of them had consumption. At first it was only catarrh—and it was neglected. Now Catarrhozone cures so quickly it's foolish to suffer—it's a shame to sit on sniffling and hawking. Catarrhozone goes direct to the cause of the disease—that's why it's so good certain to cure. It stops the cough, prevents that disgusting discharge, clears phlegm out of the throat in five minutes. Very pleasant, and safe too: get Catarrhozone from your druggist to-day.

SELBY.

Winter is over and spring is again here, offering a change in the usual occupations to the people of the vicinity of Selby. The farmers are in the thick of their spring ploughing, etc., while their better halves, whose work is never done, are in the ever enjoyable pursuit of their cold-weather cleaning. But the people of this beautiful hamlet do not believe in all work and no play, and are far from it, as the following events will show.

On Monday evening an Easter festival was held in the church. Refreshments were served in the tea room, and the company, after the sumptuous repast, returned to the body of the church, where a most interesting programme was enjoyed. The sweet voices of the Napanee Glee Club charmed us all with their well rendered songs. Rev. Mr. Sears, of Newburgh, delighted us with a most splendid talk. The Misses Robinson of Napanee, and Mr. Collins, of Selby, was most thoroughly enjoyed.

We are very sorry to learn of the removal of Mr. Robinson and his family from our village. They will be greatly missed as they were such a help in the musical circles.

Mr. Wm. Ballance, graduate of Ontario Business College, Belleville, is home again, and is seriously contemplating buying a new upper third buggy this season. We are very glad to have him with us again.

Mr. Paul, student of Queen's University, Kingston, was home for a few days. His service of song on Sunday evening was highly appreciated.

Miss Duke, of Queen's Model School, Whitby, is home for the Easter holidays.

Mr. Harry Dean, graduate of Belleville Business College, is home for the vacation.

DENBIGH.

Miss Jennie Lane, teacher, Slate Falls, is spending the holidays under the parental roof.

Mr. S. Shetler, Denbigh school teacher, has left for Mt. Julian, Napanee, and will not return after Easter.

Mr. Irving Lake is doing a rushing business in his saw mill this season.

Mr. Wesley Lane made a business trip to Griffith and vicinity Tuesday.

We are having beautiful warm weather now after our recent snow storm of Friday.

Mr. John McCoy made a business trip to Deere on Tuesday.

Our Municipal Council met on Saturday last and a great deal of business was done.

This has been the greatest season in years for maple syrup and sugar, nearly making four and five hundred weight and gallons of syrup.

Dr. Aylsworth has left for his new field, Roseneath, near Cobourg, and Dr. J. Chant from Chantry has taken up head quarters here.

Master C. E. Pinnock is very ill with scarlet trouble. He is under medical treatment here. If he is not improving soon he will be taken to Napanee.

Miss F. Stewart and Mrs. Healy spent Saturday in Denbigh.

MORVEN W.M.S.

The at home given in the Brick church, Morven, under the auspices of the W.M.S., on Wednesday, April 26th, proved to be a very interesting and profitable meeting. There was a good turn out of the ladies of the circuit, but on account of the extremely busy season many of the gentlemen were not able to be present. There were representatives present from Odessa, Bath, Switzerville and Hawley, nearly all of whom took part in the programme. Refreshments were served in abundance at the close.

Arrangements for the land for the new canning factory are fully completed and Mr. Carson expects to have the work next week putting in the railroad siding and switch. Work on the buildings will be commenced very shortly, as the plans, etc., are ready. While they are still open for a few more contracts for corn and tomatoes, they fully expect to have them completed this week.

THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH.

An important event in theatricals is the coming next Wednesday, May 3d, to the Grand Opera House in Kingston, of that sterling portraiture of Scotch home life, "The Bonnie Brier Bush." This play is one of the few enduring book dramatizations and is always a welcome visitor to any city. The story of "The Bonnie Brier Bush" has been cleverly adapted to stage purposes and is strongly imbued with the heart interest and dramatic intensity indispensable to plays of this kind, while a delightful vein of comedy predominates the entire performance. Reuben Wood continues as the tippling post-carver of Drumtochty, and the supporting company is said to include many notable players, while the scenic investiture is the same elaborate outlay—freshly treated—seen here before. Seats will be on sale Monday morning.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND NOTES.

Parish of Camden East—The services Easter Day were very bright and hearty and the weather all sunshine and smiles. At Newburgh at St. John's church at 6 a.m., a good congregation assembled to keep the feast, when thirty-six partook of the holy communion. The sanctuary looked very attractive with handsome potted plants. The solo at the offertory was sung by Mrs. C. H. Finkle, with violin and organ accompaniment. At 7 p.m. the congregation comfortably filled the church. The musical portion of the service reflected great credit on the organist and choir and all taking part. The soloists in the anthem were Mrs. C. H. Finkle, Miss Annie Sutton and Mr. Fred. Hill. At the close of a splendid service Mrs. Adams and Mr. F. G. Miller played a magnificent musical setting by Gounod, which was much admired. We were sorry to see several of the members of the choir sitting in the body of the church instead of taking their proper places in the chancel.

Yarker, St. Anthony's Church—Services were held at 8.45 a.m. and 3 p.m. The beautiful little church looked its very best and was most tastefully decorated. The choir was out in full force and the music a credit to all who took part in it. About fifty communicated at 11 a.m. The service was also very hearty and a large congregation present. The anthem—"Lift up your heads" was well rendered, the duet portion being taken by Misters Archie Babcock and Fred. Deare, quartette by Messrs. S. Babcock, Clarence Ewart, Stuart Connolly and Willie Skinner, and solo by Mr. Bert Shults. The organist and choir were again ably assisted by Mrs. Doller, Miss Lily Montgomery and Mr. F. G. Miller.

At Camden East—The service was at 11 a.m. in the Parish church when a magnificent congregation assembled to do honor to their risen Lord. The choir were out in full force, and with the organist deserve the greatest praise for the excellent musical programme. The hymns were heartily sung by the congregation. The flowers banked round the altar with two exquisite bouquets of cut flowers on the re-table, emphasized the joy of Easter Day. We noticed a large number of friends this year both from the country and the village of Camden East. At least seventy received the holy communion. The offerings during the day were liberal at all the churches, and Easter 1905 was decidedly another red letter day in the history of this Parish.

The Rev. R. S. Wilkinson, of Amherst Island, will (D.V.) Sunday, April 30th, preach at St. Luke's church, Camden East, at 11 a.m., Yarker at 3 p.m., and Newburgh at 7 p.m.

The general vestry meeting was held at St. Anthony's church, Yarker, Easter Tuesday with the following results: Rector's warden, Mr. A. W. Benjamin; people's warden, Mr. Arthur Baxter; lay delegate, Mr. B. S. O'Laughlin; sidesmen, Mr. J. C. Connolly, Dr. Smith, Mr. John Ewart and Mr. W. Doller. The finances are usual are in splendid order, and as regards contributions to missionary and other diocesan funds and promptness in the payment of the rector's stipend, the members of this congregation are an example and credit to the Diocese of Ontario. Votes of thanks were tendered the organists, Miss Gertrude Connolly and Miss Violet Ewart, and the choir, the church wardens, the superintendent and Sunday School workers and to the Guild and Women's Auxiliary, which has just packed an splendid bales for Manitoba valued at about $70.00.

WILTON.

Many friends of Mrs. James Thompson and Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Lapum met at their home on Friday evening, the 21st instant, to show their appreciation of the true worth of these friends before their departure to their new home in Watertown. The gathering was a genuine surprise to Mrs. Thompson, and Mr. and Mrs. Lapum, on account of which well filled baskets were taken with the friends. The most enjoyable time was spent, the only shadow cast over the evening being the sad benefit of the departure of these citizens of Wilton to another place. After tea had been served the gathering was called to order by the pastor of the circuit, Rev. R. A. Whattam. An address was read by Mrs. Whattam, at the conclusion of which Mrs. Charles Stover presented to Mesdames Thompson and Lapum, two well filled purses, the gift of their many friends in Wilton. Others present then made their presentations to the regret of the community at losing citizens so much esteemed by the people, and the gathering dispersed after singing God be with You Till We Meet Again, and a prayer by the pastor.

The home of Mr. David Vandervaeter was the scene of a pretty wedding on the 19th of April, the marriage of his daughter, Miss Ida, to Mr. Herbert Martin, of Switzerville. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. J. R. Real at 8 o'clock. The bride entered the drawing room on the arm of her father's arm. The groom is one of Switzerville's highly respected farmers. The bride was handsomely dressed in blue silk. After the happy couple were pronounced man and wife, the guests were invited to the dining room where the table was heavily ladened with a sumptuous repast. Amongst the guests were Mrs. Harry Vandervoort, Mrs. John Wilson and Mr. and Mrs. E. Martin. The presents to the bride were beautiful and costly, showing the high esteem in which she was held. Their many friends all join in wishing them every happiness in life.

Vestry Meetings.

NAPANEE—

The annual vestry meeting of St. Mary Magdalene's church, Napanee, was held on Monday evening, April 24th. In the absence of the Rector, who was out of town attending a funeral, Mr. G. F. Ruttan was called to the chair.

The financial statement of the Wardens, for the year just ended, showed a substantial increase in the offertory, with the result that all bills and accounts were met and a balance left in the treasury for the ensuing year.

Mr. T. B. Wallace was re-appointed Warden by the Rector, and Mr. Dudley L. Hill elected by the people, Mr. F. F. Miller wishing to retire.

Mr. J. J. Lockwood was appointed secretary-treasurer of the church funds. The completion of the tower on the church will be proceeded with this summer by day work.

The vestry meeting then adjourned, and formed into a meeting of the congregation, and re-elected Mr. G. F. Ruttan lay delegate to the Synod for the next three years.

J. F. CHALMERS,
Vestry Clerk.

ODESSA.

A very satisfactory vestry meeting was held at St. Alban's church, Odessa, on Easter Monday night, Rev. Rural Dean Dibb presiding. The Church Wardens' accounts showed an increase of $100 in the receipts over last year; the expenditure however was just about double that of the previous year as two payments have been made on the mortgage during the year instead of one. The debt is now only $100, which will be entirely cleared off this year. A balance of $35.08 on the right side was carried forward.

Mr. R. Bennett was appointed Clergyman's Warden, and Mr. Ar H. Shaw the People's Warden. A most cordial vote of thanks was tendered to the retiring Wardens, Mr. G. Perrin, who has served for ten years, and Mr. T. Graham six years, for the very faithful and zealous way in which they have performed their duties. It is earnestly hoped that the new Wardens will maintain the same zeal and efficiency. There was a good attendance at the Easter communion on Easter day, though several members of the congregation neglected their duty and were conspicuous by their absence. After the service Rural Dean Dibb, on behalf of the congregation, presented Miss Lillie Lee, the organist, with a purse of money, accompanied by a few words of sincere appreciation.

Lay delegates to Synod are Messrs. A. H. Shaw one year, and T. Graham for three years. Meeting closed in harmony, with the benediction.

He was ill but five days. Everything was done that medical aid could offer to relieve the sufferer, but all was in vain. God called him and released him from his suffering and pain. His age was twenty-nine years and nine months. The funeral took place on Friday at 9.30 a.m. The remains were taken to the Roman Catholic church, where High Mass was celebrated by Rev. SIR HIRAM MAXIM
The Inventor of the Automatic Gun

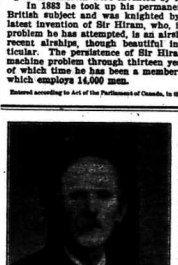
The man who has invented more deadly instruments of war than any other inventor in the world's history is Sir Hiram S. Maxim, the American who left his native country about twenty years ago in a burst of indignation at the lack of recognition of his genius shown by this government at Washington. Lord Salisbury said of him: "He has prevented more men from dying of old age than any other man who ever lived."

This mechanical genius who has added to the horrors of war was the son of a wood turner in Maine, where he was born in 1840. He began life, he says, "with a common school education and a jack knife." He showed more skill in handling the knife than the education, and the mechanical turn of his mind soon becoming evident, he was apprenticed when he was fourteen to a carriage builder. After four years of this service he studied metal working and before he was twenty-one was foreman in a machine shop preparatory to a better position in the extensive works of his uncle.

In 1873 he took up the problem of his famous automatic gun, which was not perfected until eleven years later. The inspiration of this invention of destruction came from the kick of an old musket he was using; it was so severe a kick that it threw him over and bruised his cheek. When the stars and stripes faded out of sight, it occurred to his bright mind that the energy of the recoil might be caught and utilized to reload the rifle, and the result of his experiments was the Maxim automatic machine gun, a death-dealing affair that murders more in a minute than the rate of three thousand shots a minute. This is but one of his many improvements in ordnance and explosives. In 1877 his attention was turned to electricity, and some of the earliest electric lights in America were invented by him.

In 1883 he took up his permanent residence in England, and became a British subject and was knighted by Queen Victoria four years ago. The latest invention of Sir Hiram, who, it is said, has never failed to solve any problem he has attempted, is an airship that really flies by means of the recent airships, though beautiful in theory, have failed in this one particular. The persistence of Sir Hiram is shown in the fact that his airship machine problem through thirteen years of his busy life, during large part of which time he has been a member of the firm of Vickers' Sons & Maxim, which employs 14,000 men.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by W. G. Mack, at the Department of Agriculture.



THOMAS W. WHELAN.

A kindly old gentleman, for years a resident of Napanee, passed away at his residence on Friday last, 28th April, after a well spent life of over seventy-eight years. Deceased was for twenty years the agent of the Dominion Bank here, and through his faithful painstaking and kindly manner earned the confidence and respect of all officials. He was a kind, indulgent husband and father, and leaves beside his aged partner, five children, all of whom are grown and some of them widely separated. They are Mr. Joseph Whelan, of Wallace, Idaho, who has prospered in his Western home, and who last January elected Police Magistrate and city clerk of that town; Thomas, Patrick and Cornelius, of Fernie, B.C., and Mrs. T. Wood, of Napanee.

Mr. Whelan was born in Muhetersville, county Kildare, Ireland, on December 21st, 1830. His boyhood days were spent in farming at that time troops were constantly moving from place to place in Ireland, and young Whelan would follow them for miles and then walk back, only longing for the time when he could wear a uniform. Up to a short time before his death, he was a dead lamb in the present war, his sympathies being with the Japanese. He was a strong Britisher, whom he fought so determinedly for Britain's cause. The funeral took place on Sunday last and was largely attended, service being conducted by Rev. Father Hartigan, at St. Mary's Church, of which deceased was a faithful and consistent member, from 1840 The Napanee publishes a sketch of Mr. Whelan's military career, which we re-produce, as follows:

"Mr. Whelan was a soldier of a quiet disposition, and not much given to relating his personal experience, but when he would speak of the part he carried away by his theme, and stories of a soldier's life would flow from him. He was only an old warrior with the martial spirit strong in him, can relate how he served his full term in the game of war, from the goose step to the receiving at the hands of His Majesty of medals for distinguished services.

"He knew the Duke of Wellington, and his was the last regiment inspected by that great general; Lord Roberts, when he was a captain, Lord Wolseley, in the Crimea, and General Prom-by when attending the Military School at

THOMAS W. WHELAN.

Kingston, Sir George Buller, uncle of Sir Redvers Buller, was at once his commanding officer.

"His boyhood days were spent in farming. At that time crops were constantly moving from point to place in Ireland, and young Whelan sometimes followed them for miles, listening to the music and hoping for the time when he it would be he wearing a red coat. In 1850 he crossed over to England, and for a few months worked in a cotton mill. On his way to Liverpool he met a recruiting officer, took the Queen's shilling, and was transformed into "Private Whelan."

The regiment which he joined was the First Battalion, Prince Consorts Own Rifle Brigade, Prince Albert, Prince Consort, was a colonel in the brigade for many years, and the corps was named after him on his death. He (Jimes his regiment at Canterbury, and after three months' drill the regiment was ordered to the Crimea. They embarked at Dover in 1851 for Cape of Good Hope. It was in this year that the ill-fated steamer Birkenhead, with 600 troops on board, foundered at sea, and went down while on her way to the same port.

"Mr. Whalen describes the natives at that day as a magnificent race of people, looking as if they were cast in a mould. They were extremely honest in their dealing with one another, and hardly without guile. When a young man thought he had arrived at age he became enamored a warrior, and entitled to a wife, he was put to the following test: Taken to the bush, an assegai was given him, and with this weapon alone he was obliged to sustain himself for three weeks, remaining out in the bush his tribe. At the expiration of this time, if he presented himself before the chiefs safe and sound, he was admitted to the roll of fighting men. If he be possessed of sufficient cattle to buy a wife, it was generally his first act after his promotion. All tribes had their own peculiar marriage ceremony, this being one we have never met with before. We give it to our readers. The warriors would form a large ring, the bride would be led in at the rear. A blanket was laid down in the centre of the circle. Upon this blanket the couple lie down, and a large kaross was thrown over them. The war dance was then commenced and kept up all night.

"The war which this brigade was sent to suppress was caused by the unscrupulous robbery of the natives by the whites. As an instance, Mr. Whelan says a pedler would buy a ton or so of brass rings at a shilling a dozen, hawk it about the kraals and beadworks for the women. With the stock he would obtain a large quantity. A single ring would buy a full grown bullock, a string of beads or an apron brought a smaller return; if cash were wanted, and sometimes it was, a shilling would always take the penny, it being the largest. When a trader had a drove of a hundred or two cattle he would drive them to Port Elizabeth and realize a pound a head. The natives became more intelligent as time went on, and sought to get better bargains, but they were no match for the whites in trickery, and they finally rose in rebellion. They were very superstitious, and should an infant make its appearance before the authority of the marriage ceremony, the father, mother and child were put to death.

"At the close of the Kaffir war the brigade returned to England, arriving at Portsmouth in Jan., 1853. After being at Aldershot a short time, and at Dover, they were ordered to Malta, where Mr. Whelan took part in almost all the principal parades and reviews of the camps at Malta. He has three medals—a Crimean medal, one given by the Turkish government to all the British soldiers then in Turkey, the Crimea and South African medal. He also has four bars, given for battles of Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman and Sebastopol. His account of the battles of the campaign would fill a volume. The battle of Inkerman was the hardest fought; 8,000 British fell being opposed to 60,000 Russians, and only 1,000 left in the morning till 3 in the afternoon, when the Russians were driven into Sebastopol.

"The battle of the Alma was the most disastrous in results, the losses on both sides being 30,000 killed and wounded. The Russian wounded were laid four deep along the river, and extended over a mile. The fight, in close engagement of the French and British for three nights to make a path for the guns to pass, has been beaten back each time. Lieut. Tryon, the ship's officer who would do with him but to ship a few days after the battle, died as a result of a collision, volunteered to take 250 of the French and British and accomplished what the French had failed in doing, and was given leave, and succeeded. In the assault Whelan was in the front rank, and received the only wound he ever got in all his battles. A Russian made a rush at him with the bayonet and nearly used at the pits; a Russian made a desperate lunge at Whelan, who struck his opponent's rifle down, and then penetrated on the right side. Before he could recover his gun, Whelan had passed the bayonet through his body. Beyond the sound of the bugle call Russians four to one came to retake the position, but without success. Whelan was wounded, and Mr. Whelan never lost an hour from duty for wounds. Lieut. Tryon, who was considered the bravest man in the army, was killed in the charge. On another occasion, while carrying a message to the entrenchments, Whelan was struck on the back of the head by a piece of shell and knocked down, but received no injury. He was a witness of the Charge of the Light Brigade, immortalized memorable by Tennyson.

"When peace was declared, the regiment was ordered back to England, and went into camp at Aldershot. Queens and royal family came down to camp frequently, where they would see their children small, and used to play about the pavilion. Whelan was on duty at one time, and was ordered by him to present arms on the rules required by the manner of the royal family. The children, running about, saw Mr. Whelan, and told their Majesty noticed it, and approached him, and complimented him on his salute to the little ones. She also closely examined his medals, and asked him if he was not proud to wear them.

"Mr. Whelan was successively stationed at Aldershot, Edinburgh, Glasgow and Newcastle-on-Tyne. In 1871 the regiment was ordered to Canada, their destination was Quebec, but on prevented landing there, and they disembarked at Halifax. After disembarking at St. John, N.B., and Montreal, they were sent to Hamilton, Ont., and Mr. Whelan volunteered into the Royal Canadian Rifles, serving with them for about 18 months or until they were disbanded in 1870. He was then transferred with a fine pension of eleven pence (eleven cents) per day. In the same year, he moved to Napanee, where he has since resided. "The old gentleman is hale and hearty, and the true soldier spirit still predominates in his character. He has received a letter from the present Boer War, and never questioned the superior ability of the English generals. He has the greatest confidence in the British soldier, warriors and fireside critics, who pass judgment have only unstinted power in duck shooting on Hay Bay."

If a man's wife is a good baker, nothing but the best flour is good enough for her. There can be no greater extravagance than the use of inferior flour.

Winchester Springs, Feb. 27th, 05.

"I read about Royal Household Flour which is purified by electricity. I also read about the woman paying freight 25 miles before she would be without it. Royal Household was not sold in our town, I was asking about it and my grocer told me to wait a day or two and he would get some, and I am glad I did so. My wife is a good baker and made good bread out of other flours, but what she has now made out of Royal Household is so far ahead that I would be willing to pay freight fifty miles instead of twenty-five, rather than go without it. There is no flour 'just as good' as Royal Household."

HARD ON THE CAT.

Some years ago a cat got mixed up with a sheet of sticky fly paper and not only got mixed one of the real sticky kind of life. The cat struggled, spitting, mewing creature presents a most ludicrous spectacle to onlookers and causes an immense amount of laughing fun, but when the frantic and maddened pet becomes clinically absorbed by the sticky stuff and the damage to carpets, curtains, etc., etc., begins to be realized, the housewife fails to appreciate the humorous side of the matter at all, and there decides that in future she will use only Wilson's Fly Pads, which are three hundred times more effectual and absolute damage to carpets or furniture. All druggists and grocers impose sell Wilson's Fly Pads. Avoid worthless imitations.

The Yellow Holly

BY FERGUS HUME.

The best disinfectant of all is sunlight. It destroys by its very brightness all sorts of germs and at the same time helps the growth of plants and animal life. Doubtless all have noticed that mould grows during the night and in dark, damp cellars. Bright sunlight quickly destroys germs, mould or other organisms. That is why it is best to let the sunlight into your houses for its purifying influence.

At the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N.Y., Dr. Pierce, chief consulting surgeon, started experiments, some three years ago, with the Finsen light in conjunction with the X-ray in the treatment of disease. He got excellent results therefrom, and was among the first to adapt this remarkable cure to many cases which it was formerly supposed must of necessity be treated by the knife.

Not only is Dr. R. V. Pierce notable for his surgical achievements at his hospital in Buffalo, but nearly a third of a century ago he discovered certain roots and herbs which were nature's remedies, and succeeded in putting them up in a form that would be easily procured and ready to use. This he called Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It maintains the patient's nutrition by enabling him to eat, retain, digest and assimilate nutritious food. It overcomes gastric irritability and symptoms of indigestion, and in this way fever, nightsweats, headaches, etc., are done away with. It fortifies the body against the germs of consumption, grip and malaria, it builds up the tissues and gives healthy flesh.

Those desiring to know something about the body in health and disease, also medicine and surgery, without technicalities, should read the "Common Sense Medical Adviser," which can be had for 50 cents in stamps for the cloth-bound book. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Really," said Mrs. Ward again, "I don't know. I fancied that Walter, you see"— And she cast her eyes on the neat little man.

"Oh, I scratch," said Walter, in his elegant way. "There's no fighting against George. He has all the luck."

"You call him George?"

"Why shouldn't I? He's my cousin, the head of the house"—

"When I go to my long home," finished Derrington. "Well, Mrs. Ward, do you consent to the match?"

"Ivy, mother," said Dorothy imploringly.

Knowing what Derrington knew and how obstinate both lovers were, Mrs. Ward did not see very well what else she could do. After a few sighs, and having squeezed a few tears she cried to her daughter in a muffled voice expressive of deep emotion, "Dorothy, my dear child, do you love George?"

"Yes," said Dorothy simply. "You know I love him."

"George, do you love my child?"

"I do," replied George curtly.

"It is hard," said Mrs. Ward, with a deep sigh, "to see my children leave its parent. But you love her, you have won her." Here she rose and, raising Dorothy from her knees, gave her to George. "Take her, George, and with her take a mother's blessing."

The idea of Mrs. Ward's blessing was too much for Walter, and he went off into a shriek of laughter which ended in his leaving the room. George was quite unmoved. He thanked Mrs. Ward and kissed Dorothy. Then he took her to a distant seat near the window, where they could talk sensibly. Lord Derrington was left to console the afflicted mother. This he proceeded to do immediately.

"Egad, you did it well," he said, looking at the pretty woman. "I don't believe Miss Terry or Mrs. Siddons could have done it better."

Mrs. Ward saw that it was useless to hide the truth from this keen eyed old man any longer. "Oh, don't be nasty," she said plaintively and rustled up to him. "Of course I'm grieved Dorothy to marry Walter, but George does just as well."

"Well," said Derrington, "you care very little about Dorothy, and you don't like George. When they are married you must stop away as much as is consistent with your feelings."

"I'll do what I like," said Mrs. Ward, beginning to tap her foot.

"No; I don't think you will. You threatened me in this room."

"I will only playing a game," protested Mrs. Ward.

"Well, I can play a game also, Mrs. Jersey has left behind her a confession in which she details how you managed to cheat your sister, Miss Bull. If you don't leave that couple severely alone I shall show the confession to Dorothy."

"I never did anything to my sister, Mrs. Jersey tells lies"—

Derrington made a gesture of disgust. "There—there," he said, "what is the use of talking further? Things are settled. When Dorothy and George are married I'll see what I can do for you."

"Oh, thank you, dear Lord Derrington," she said artlessly and pressing his arm. "I know you are the most generous of men. But I really can't stop talking here all day." She rustled over to Dorothy. "My darling, I must go and do some shopping. No; you can stay here. I will call again in an hour."

CHAPTER XXIV.

IT was the next day that George went to see Ireland. At the door he was informed that Ireland had been very ill with his heart and that the doctor had been called in. Nevertheless Ireland would not obey the advice of his physician and stay in bed. He was up and dressed as usual and in his study.

George entered the large room and saw his former partner seated at his desk as usual. The man looked very ill. His large, placid face was extremely pale, there were dark circles under his eyes, and he even seemed to have grown lean. His clothes hung loosely on him, and he did not rise when George entered.

"Excuse me, George," he said, with an attempt at cheerfulness, "but I am not so well as I might be."

"You are looking ill—very ill," said George, taking a chair.

Ireland nodded. "I can't live long," he remarked in his heavy voice. "So the doctor informs me. My heart is extremely weak. It's as bad as it well can be. For the last few days I have gyrated sadly from my usual habits. I have not taken a walk, and my system of life is quite upset. It's the beginning of the end." He paused and sighed. "You are looking well, George."

"I have every reason to. Mrs. Ward has consented to my marriage."

"With her daughter? How is that?" "Well, the church walk, and my parents were married has been discovered. The marriage has been proved beyond a doubt. My grandfather has seen both copy of the certificate and now holds it."

"Is he pleased?"

"Very pleased. He is now as friendly to me and me as he has been hitherto hostile."

Ireland nodded, breathing heavily. "I thought he would," he said. "He and I had a long talk about you on the day I called. That was when I saw Mrs. Ward and"—

"You can go on," said George, seeing his hesitation. "I know the whole story."

"What story?" asked Ireland suspiciously.

"The story of what happened at San Remo, Mrs. Ward, Miss Violet Howard, and her sister Jenny is Miss Bull."

"Yes. Poor Jenny, she was the better of the two, and how she drags out a miserable life in a London lodging house. While Violet, who is a bad woman"—

"And the mother of Dorothy," interrupted George imperiously. "Say no more, sir."

"You are quite right. As I can't say good of the woman, let me say no bad. Well, you know how she loved your father."

"I think she flirted with him, but it was Jenny who really loved."

"And look at her reward!" said Ireland, with a deep sigh. "Those who try to do their best always come off worst. I loved your mother, George, and I have been a lonely man all my life."

It was a sad case. George wished to get at the truth, but he was so sorry for Ireland, who had passed so many miserable years, that he did not like to inflict more pain. Nevertheless it was necessary to learn if Ireland had really visited Mrs. Jersey on that night so as to set Bawdsey's mind at rest. If George did not learn the truth Bawdsey might attempt the discovery, and he would handle the old man in a much worse manner than George was likely to do. While pondering how he could set about his unpleasant task George was saved from making the first step, always the most difficult, by an observation from Ireland, which paved the way to an explanation.

"How did you discover the church?" he asked idly.

"In rather a queer way. Lola Veles"—

Ireland opened his eyes, which had been closed, and looked at him. "Who is Lola Veles?" he asked anxiously.

"She is a dancer whom I helped—oh, quite in a proper way, Mr. Ireland. You know the name?"

Ireland, contrary to George's expectation, nodded. "There was a woman of that name. She was the lover of your father's death. She was called Veles and was in love with him."

"He seems to have been a fascinating man," said George, smiling, to set Ireland at his ease. "But this Lola is the daughter of the woman you mention. It was she who found the church."

By this time Ireland was quite awake and keenly anxious for details. "How did she learn its name?" he demanded quickly.

"She found it in the confession of Mrs. Jersey."

Ireland snapped the paper cutter he was holding, and, leaning back in his chair, looked anxiously at George. "What do you mean?"

"Well," replied the young man, keeping his eyes fixed on Ireland's face, "it seems that Mrs. Jersey left a confession behind her as to what took place at San Remo."

"Who has that confession?"

"I have! I got it from Lola!"

"And how did she manage to obtain it?"

For answer George related how Lola had called to see Mrs. Jersey, and how she had managed to obtain the confession "It was far from reading it," finished George, "that she learned of the church in which my parents were married. Desiring that I should marry her, and thinking I would not do so were my birth proved, she went to the church to destroy the registers. She was caught with torn leaves and arrested."

"Arrested?"

"Yes. I wonder you did not see the case reported in the papers."

"I have been too ill to read the papers lately," said Ireland, looking round the room in rather a bewildered way, "and none of my servants told me. What happened?"

"Oh, Lola was let off with a small fine. She is now back dancing at the music hall. She gave the confession to me."

"Did any one else see it—the authorities?"

"No. You can set your mind at rest, Mr. Ireland. I got it from Lola before she was taken to prison. No one had seen it but myself and Lord Derrington."

Ireland drew a long breath of relief. "You made a strange remark just now, George," he said, not looking at the young man. "You told me to set my mind at rest. Why did you say that?"

"I have read the confession," said George quietly.

"Then you know?"

"I know that my father's death was due to an accident."

"What! Did that wretched woman tell the truth?"

"She told the truth."

"And she did not accuse me of having murdered your father?"

"No. She did not. I suppose she thought it was as well to go to her long home with as few sins as possible on her conscience."

"Thank God for that," said Ireland. "George," he said in faltering tones, "I have suffered greatly on account of that most unhappy accident. Your father and I were not very good friends, as I found it difficult to forgive him for having taken from me the woman I loved. But at San Remo we got on better together. I stifled my resentment so that I might see as much of you as possible, George. Knowing that I was not on good terms with Vane, I thought that Mrs. Jersey might have accused me of the crime. She did try to get money out of me."

"So Bawdsey told me."

"Bawdsey. Who is he?"

"I forgot you don't know. He is a detective who has been looking after the case on behalf of Lord Derrington. I learn from the confession of Mrs. Jersey that he is her husband."

"George Bates. I remember. She told me she married him and went to America. It was after her return from America that she tried to get money out of me. I refused, but that I did not realise the danger to which she could expose me, but I knew that if I once yielded I would be in her power. Besides, I had a defence, as she got the stiletto from the woman Veles."

"And it was with that same stiletto that Mrs. Jersey was killed."

"By whom?" asked Ireland. "Did her husband"—

"No. We do not know who killed her. Perhaps you may know?"

"I?" Ireland looked genuinely surprised. "No. How should I know?"

"Well," said George, rather awkwardly, "it seems that Bawdsey has got it into his head that you know about this confession. That you were afraid it would be published after her death and that you went to the house on that night to get it. He doesn't exactly accuse you of the murder, but"—

"I don't know what else you would call his statements but accusations," retorted Ireland, with some heat, "but I never was near the house. I certainly thought that Mrs. Jersey might leave some such confession, but I never asked her about it."

"Then you cannot guess who killed her?"

"No. I was never near the house. I was in bed and asleep. My servants will tell you so."

"I need not ask them," said George quickly. "I never thought you were guilty, and I only came to receive your assurance so that I might tell Bawdsey and prevent him troubling you."

"If Bawdsey comes here I'll soon make short work of him," said Ireland sharply. "I am not afraid."

"You need not be. Mrs. Jersey's own confession exonerates you."

"I don't mind even if that. I would have faced the worst had it to be faced. I never was a coward except in one thing." He paused and looked closely at George. "Are you not telling me how I was the unhappy cause of your father's death."

"You were not the cause, in my opinion. Mrs. Jersey was the cause."

"Well, I thought you would shrink from me did you know all."

"I do know all, and I do not shrink from you," replied George, leaning across the desk to shake Ireland's hand. It was a pure accident and has been related by your enemy."

"I am so glad the truth is known to you at last," faltered the old man, "and that you see how unconsciously I caused the death. I shall lie down forever. But I am glad you know. I am glad you are not angered."

"We are the best of friends, Mr. Ireland. You have always been kind to me. I am afraid my visit has been too much for you."

"No. I am glad you came. I am glad you spoke out. I always intended to do so, but, I feared lest you should blame me."

By this time they were ascending the lift. George instructed the man to his room and sent for the doctor. Ireland undressed and got to bed. Then he insisted on George leaving him.

"But you are ill," protested the young man.

"I am dying. But what of that? I am glad to die. I shall meet Rosina again after long, long years of sorrow.

Go, George. We understand one another. Let us now forgive and forgive me. There is no more to be said."

"There is nothing to forgive," replied George softly. Then, to humor his old guardian, he departed. A strong grip of the hand was exchanged between them. George left the room and saw Ireland lying as still as any corpse. Only his lips moved, and they murmured continuously, "Rosina, Rosina!" He was true to the woman he loved to the very end.

George left the house, as there was nothing he could do, but he intended to call it again. Meanwhile he repaired to Amelia square to see Bawdsey. Derrington wished him to tell the detective to stop looking after the case and discharge him from his employment. In his pocket George had a check for £1,000, and when this was paid the whole case was to be relegated to obscurity. The sooner Bawdsey married Lola and went to America the better, Derrington thought. And for his own sake Bawdsey would hold his tongue, seeing what a close connection he was of the dead woman.

Bawdsey was at home and saw George at once. He looked rather excited and could hardly keep his seat. "Well, Mr. Brendon," he asked, "what is it?"

"I should rather ask you that," said George. "You seem excited."

"Not very. Only I have been fortunate in some business, and"—

"What is the business?"

"I'll tell you that later. What is yours?"

"A pleasant one," rejoined George. "Here is the check for £1,000 which my grandfather promised you. Marry Lola and go to the States and stop searching for the assassin of Mrs. Jersey."

"Thank you," replied Bawdsey, taking the check eagerly; "your grandfather is a prince, Mr. Brendon. As to the case, why should I stop searching?"

"You will never find the assassin."

"Pardon me," said Bawdsey in high glee. "I have found the assassin. Miss Bull killed Mrs. Jersey."

CHAPTER XXV.

GEORGE stared at the triumphant detective in surprise. It seemed impossible that what he stated could be true. Miss Bull was the very last person whom Brendon would have accused.

"You must mean Margery," said George after a time.

"No, I don't," replied Bawdsey in a determined voice. "I mean Miss Bull, or, as you know her, Miss Jenny Howard."

"But what reason"—

"Ah, that's a long story! She shall tell you herself."

"Have you had her arrested?"

"Not yet. But she will be arrested before the end of the day. I have already communicated with Scotland Yard. It was pure luck about Margery that put me on the scent," Bawdsey said, with great complacency, "though, to be sure, I had my suspicions before. It was to watch Miss Bull that I came here."

"What made you think that she was guilty?"

"Well, it seemed to me that she was the only person who could have killed Ellis. She and Eliza hated one another because of their mutual love for your father."

George groaned. What a lot of trouble his father had caused with his handsome looks and charming manners! Even after his death the fatal attraction he exercised seemed to bring about disaster. "She did not kill Mrs. Jersey on that account," he said.

"Wait till you hear. She will tell you. In fact, she asked me to send for you, as she wishes to speak."

"Let me hear how you came to learn that this poor creature struck the blow. You say that it was some remark I made which"—

"Yes, it was," said Bawdsey eagerly, throwing himself into a seat. "Your remark that Margery might be guilty"—

"One moment," interrupted George in his turn. "I may tell you that I have seen Mr. Ireland, and he declares that he never was near the house on that night, that he knew nothing of the confession, and that he had no stiletto. He is innocent."

"Now that I have heard Miss Bull I know that, sir. She's the one."

"Well, and how did you find out?"

Bawdsey drew his chair closer and began, with a most important air: "I rather agreed with your idea that Margery might be guilty," he said, "and when I turned it over in my own mind I thought it more and more probable. I therefore determined to get Margery alone and work on her fears. Well, it was this morning in the sitting room. Miss Bull had gone out and had left Margery to make up some accounts. The girl was laboring away at them and getting into a hopeless mess. I came to speak with her and offered to do them. I soon put the accounts to rights and then began to talk of Miss Bull."

"Why of Miss Bull?"

"Why"—Bawdsey pinched his lip—"I thought at the time that Margery was guilty, and that if in talking to her I laid the blame on Miss Bull the girl would jump at it."

"Well, you accused Miss Bull of the crime?"

"In a way I did. Margery denied it." "What did you say?"

"That she might as well confess. I declared that I had evidence to prove Miss Bull's guilt, and that she would be arrested when she came back. I declare, Mr. Vane, I thought the girl would strike me. She was like a wildcat."

"I wish she had," growled George.

"She said if I arrested Miss Bull she would kill me. I said, 'As you killed your aunt.' She up and said: 'Yes, I did kill her. Miss Bull is innocent, and you know she is.' Of course, when she admitted the fact, I at once began to suspect Miss Bull."

"Why did you do that?"

"Because Margery had been guilty she would not have owned up. But if Miss Bull was guilty, Margery would certainly take the guilt on herself. While Margery was in a terrible state and taking the guilt on herself, Miss Bull came in. That stupid girl ran to her and fell at her feet, crying that I knew all, but that she would die for her dear Miss Bull."

"And what did the woman say?"

"She asked me if I knew. I said I did. She demanded how I found out. I told her that that was my business. She began to mutter a rat and suspected that I was bluffing. She then drew near and held her tongue, but Margery was in such terror for her friend that she came out with the whole story."

"The girl is half witted. All this may not be true."

"Oh, yes, it is. When Miss Bull saw that the game was up she sat down and admitted that she had killed Mrs. Jersey. She also said that she was glad that truth had come to light."

"She was raving," said George incredulously.

"No; she wasn't. She told me the whole story in the calmest manner. Just as though she were asking me to have a cup of tea. Then she asked me to send for you and to wait down to play patience. She is desperately anxious to see you."

George shuddered and followed Bawdsey down the stairs. It seemed terrible to him that such a fragile little creature as Miss Bull should be subjected to this disgrace. He did not condone her crime. She had acted wrongly and must take the consequences. But he could not forget that she was Dorothy's aunt, and he wished he could see some way of rescuing her from this dreadful position.

Miss Bull was, as Bawdsey had stated, playing patience. She looked at the very table where her victim had sat, she dealt the cards and seemed quite interested in the game. Margery was seated in a chair near at hand, looking with tearful eyes into the face of her friend. Beyond the fact that Miss Bull was wilder than usual she showed no signs of emotion.

"You have come, George," she said, addressing him by his name. "I am glad to see you. Mr. Bawdsey, you may go."

Bawdsey shrugged his shoulders and, with a glance at George, went out. After all, he had heard the story before and did not particularly care to hear it again. Besides, Bawdsey was a kindly man, and he felt sorry that he had proceeded to such extremities.

Miss Bull shuffled her pack of cards and laid them away in a box. "I shall play that game no more. I have been playing patience all my life, but the end has come, and I am glad it has come. I suppose you were astonished when Mr. Bawdsey told you," said she, looking with piercing eyes at Brendon.

"I was. I never thought that you—you"—

"That I would kill Mrs. Jersey," finished the woman quietly. "Why not? She was a bad woman. She ruined your father, caused the death of your father. She boasted of it."

"Where? When?" asked the astonished young man.

"In this very room, in my presence. But to make you understand I had better tell you all."

"One moment, Miss Bull. When you told the detective on that night did you intend to kill Mrs. Jersey?"

"No. The death card did turn up. That was a strange coincidence, George. When I came down the stairs I had no more idea than you of killing the wretched woman."

"You had come to do it?"

"I am telling you," replied Miss Bull, folding her hands on her lap. "Walk and hear. Mrs. Jersey was very rude to me on that night. I intended to remonstrate with her. She added insult to injury by locking Margery in her bedroom, so as to keep her from the house. I went up and knocked at the passage, and when all was quiet and Mrs. Jersey had gone down the stairs I released Margery's room and unlocked the door. Mrs. Jersey had struck the poor child, and she was sobbing on her bed. I then determined to go down for the second time and see Mrs. Jersey."

"For the second time? Were you down before?"

"Yes," replied Miss Bull calmly. "I wondered who Mrs. Jersey had coming to see her, particularly after she had lost her courage when she saw my silver fish on your coat."

"You noticed that?"

"Yes, and I noticed the holly also. I wondered why you wore it. The sight of it put into my mind that fatal night when he"—Miss Bull brushed aside her thoughts—"but no matter. I thought I would see if Mrs. Jersey was seeing any one, and also I wished to talk about the yellow holly."

"But why should you trouble about seeing any one?"

Miss Bull looked down and then looked up abruptly. "Mrs. Jersey would have sent me back to the asylum if she could, and I was always afraid lest she should see some one secretly about the matter. I crept down the stairs leaving Margery in my room playing at patience. Mrs. Jersey's door was closed. I heard the murmur of voices, and I put my ear to the keyhole. I heard that dancer—afterward I learned that it was the dancer—I heard her accuse Mrs. Jersey of having killed Percy Vane."

"On what grounds did Lola base that accusation?"

"She said her mother told her."

"And what did Mrs. Jersey say?" asked George.

"She denied it and made some sort of excuse. I remained to hear no more. I knew then that Mrs. Jersey had killed my Percy."

"But she did not. It was an accident."

"I know. She explained. But she was the cause. I was right to kill her. But for her Percy would have been alive, I would have been his wife, and you, George, would have been my stepson."

"What did you do next?"

"I went up to my room and resumed my game of patience. I intended to have a talk with Mrs. Jersey the next morning, but when I found that she had struck Margery I came down at once"—

"That was after 11?"

"About a quarter past. Mrs. Jersey was in her room. We talked, and I told her what I had heard. She denied it. I pointed to the stiletto which was on the table as a proof that the girl had been here. Mrs. Jersey said that it was the same stiletto with which Percy had been killed, as Lola had received it from her mother. That put the thought into my head that God intended Mrs. Jersey should be slain with the same weapon with which my darling had been stabbed."

"I accused Mrs. Jersey of having killed Percy. She gloried in the fact that it was through her he had died. She declared that if Ireland had not held her hand she would have laid him dead at her feet. She exulted that the accident had fulfilled her intention and taunted me with the fact that I never became his wife. I was very quiet," said Miss Bull, her eyes glittering, "but my blood was boiling. Mrs. Jersey turned her back on me, with an insolent laugh, and sat down. The stiletto was on the table. Her head was turned away. I softly took the dagger and"—

Miss Bull rose. "George, you now know all. Go. No, do not shake hands. I have avenged your father, and I expect I will be hanged."

Margery burst out into renewed weeping, and Miss Bull soothed her, talking to George the while. "Tell my sister," she said, "that the name of Howard will not be mentioned. I will die under my false name. No disgrace will be brought on her. As to Dorothy"—here Miss Bull's eyes grew tender—"I know she will be happy with her husband. Go, George; love her, make her a good husband and take this kiss to her from a sorely tried woman."

Before the astonished George knew what she was about he felt a pair of cold lips pressed to his own. The next moment she had pushed him out of the room and had locked the door. That was the last George saw of her.

Whether Margery had agreed to die with her or not Miss Bull, knowing what a miserable life the girl would lead after her death, compelled her to take the same dose which she had known, but when the door was burst open the two women were found on the floor in one another's arms. On the table was an empty glass, and it was ascertained that Miss Bull and Margery had taken prussic acid. Bawdsey entered the room an hour after the death alarmed by the silence. He found that his prey had escaped. Miss Bull was buried under the false name, and Margery was buried with her. Nothing of Miss Bull's sad past or of her killing of Mrs. Jersey came to light.

Six months later George Vane was seated in the library of the mansion in St. Giles square. It was after dinner, and Lord Derrington occupied his usual chair. The old man looked brighter and happier than he had looked for many years. Daily George grew a greater favorite with him, and on the morrow George was to be married. Lord Derrington had insisted that as it was his last night as a bachelor George should dine alone with him and would not admit even Walter. "It's the last time I'll have you all to myself, George," said the old man pitcously. "After tomorrow Dorothy will possess you."

"Not at all," replied George, "you will have us both. We will come back from the honeymoon in a month, and then we will live here. A lady in the house will make a lot of difference. You won't know this place when Dorothy is flitting about."

"Don't! Her mother is the kind of woman who flits."

"Oh, I don't think we'll be troubled much with Mrs. Ward. Since the shock inflicted by her sister's sad death she has become religious."

"Bah! That's only a phrase. Poor Miss Bull!" said Derrington. "I like to think of her under that name. She had a sad life. I don't wonder she killed herself. Do you think she was mad, George?"

"No. But I think the memory of her wrongs, which she attributed to Mrs. Jersey, was too much for her. She was mad for the moment, but she told me the terrible story in the calmest manner."

"And who came in at the front door that night?" asked Derrington.

"No one. After the murder Miss Bull opened the door and came back. I expect—but Margery came downstairs and stopped her. Miss Bull closed the door and remained to face the worst."

"Well, she is dead and buried, and the scandal is laid at rest, unless that Bawdsey revives it."

"Oh, you can trust Bawdsey," said George, smiling. "He and Lola are quite happy, and she has almost forgotten me. I got a letter from Bawdsey the other day. He is acting as his wife's agent, and they are making a lot of money."

"All the better. He won't talk about that business. By the way, I forgot to ask you about Ireland's money?"

"The money he left to me? I have settled that on Dorothy. Ireland, suddenly he died," said George reflectively; "just an hour after I left the house."

"Well, five thousand a year is not to be despised. Have you settled it all on Dorothy?"

"Every penny. Don't you approve?"

"Oh, yes, so long as Mrs. Ward doesn't get it."

"You can depend upon that, sir. But Dorothy will have it—Dorothy, whom I shall see, tomorrow, crowned with orange blossoms, and"—

Derrington laughed, but not unkindly. "Well, well. Better orange blossoms than yellow holly."

George nodded. "I hope never to see yellow holly again," he said, and Derrington agreed. And so the curtain ended on the threshold of George's new life with that last reference to the old.

THE END.

SOURCE OF SUPPLY POISONED.

An Alarming Condition Present in Many Places in Canada. How best to correct it.

Many people all over the Dominion are being poisoned slowly but surely, and that by their own carelessness.

The food must be pure, but digestion is not complete, and all that is not digested rots and ferments, giving off the most violent poisons. What was intended to sustain life is turned into that which destroys life.

The temperature of the body is a little over 98 degrees. Every particle of undigested food in the stomach and Bowels, subject to this temperature, which is as much as in the sun on a hot summer day. It is not necessary to explain how quickly such heat will decompose, and how quickly either animal or vegetable.

The Stomach and Bowels must be set right—Anti-Pill will do it. Dr. Leonhardt discovered his Anti-Pill especially to correct these conditions, and it has never failed when given a fair chance.

THE COMPANY INCORPORATED

The Napanee Canning Company Limited, has been incorporated under the Ontario Government and the following gentlemen are the provisional directors: The Company has been organized with Mr. Thos. Symington as President, and Mr. W. A. Carson as Vice-President and Manager. The Company finds the outlook for business so bright and encouraging that they have decided to enlarge on their original plans, and instead of expending $15,000.00 for buildings and plant as proposed in the agreement with the town of Napanee, the expenditure will be in the neighborhood of $20,000.00, and in consequence the capital stock had been increased beyond the amount originally intended. The promoters are confidently believes that the stock in this company will pay from ten to twelve per cent.

The deed of the land has been secured and is on record. The railway switch will be completed this week and the work of putting up the canning business has an excellent future, owing to the large immigration to the Northwest, as good of this kind cannot be produced there and will have to be shipped in from the east for consumption. Mr. Carson, the manager, confidently believes that the stock in this company will pay from ten to twelve per cent.

The deed of the land has been secured and is on record. The railway switch will be completed this week and the work of putting up the buildings will be proceeded with at once. The factory is one of the best held by any canning company in the country, and gives them the right to buy, sell or manufacture, or otherwise deal in all kinds of fruits, vegetables, jams, jellies, pickles, evaporated and green fruits, preserves, poultry and all other goods appertaining to a business of this kind.

"I have been using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and want to say it is the best cough medicine I have ever taken," says Mrs. Geo. L. Chubb, merchant of Harlan, Mich. There is no question about its being the best, as it will cure a cough or cold in less time than any other treatment. It should always be kept in the house ready for instant use for a cold can be cured in much less time when promptly treated. For sale at the Red Cross Drug Store. 181

'REMEMBER LOT'S WIFE'

OLD STORY TEXT FOR POWERFUL SERMON ON SOCIETY SINS.

WAGES OF SIN ALWAYS DEATH

Preacher Shows How to Escape Modern Society Sins and Their Consequences — Tragic Stories of Temptation and Fall and Glorious Ones of Victory Over Temptation—Value of Good Home Training.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 30.—In this sermon the preacher draws from the old story a most timely lesson on the sins of modern society and shows the way of escape from such sins and their consequences. The text is Luke xvii. 32, "Remember Lot's wife."

Truth is truth at all times. But truth is never more powerfully driven home to the consciences of men than when illustrated by parable or symbolized by biography or exemplified by anecdote. Christ always symbolizes truth in a very simple way. To-day he appears to us, as well as to the Pharisees of old, and says: "Men, you know the history of Lot's wife. With great opportunity of usefulness, yet she became false to her trust. Do not make the sinful mistakes she made. Do not have her doom your doom. By yonder pillar of salt learn that the wages of sin is always death. Repent of your sins while there is yet time. Repent as John the Baptist exhorted you to repent. Come and bow at God's mercy seat, and bow now." May God tear us one and all to linger only long enough in the plains of Sodom and Gomorrah to learn the mighty gospel lesson that there is no safety anywhere for sinful man outside the protecting and forgiving love of Jesus Christ.

Like Lot's wife, the most of us! Why? We are freed from the bitter temptations which, as a pack of hungry wolves, follow in the wake of merciless poverty. We have never known what it is to arise in the morning and have nothing to eat. We have never known what it is to shiver in cold because we could not afford a warm garment when we needed it. We never knew what it was to stagger about a great city after the hours of midnight in the snowstorm because we did not know where to lay our heads and then had to apply to the police station and sleep with a lot of filthy, dirty tramps upon the stone floors, with our ragged shoes under our heads for a pillow. We may not have been able to count our sheep by the thousands and our herds of horses and cattle by the hundreds, as Abraham did. We may not have servants galore and messengers at our slightest bidding. But, like Lot's wife, we and she and her husband separated from the Abrahamic household. We have always had enough food to eat, enough clothing to wear and a comfortable place in which to sleep, and we have never been in a position where hunger was gnawing at our vitals and where temptation came crashing in upon us pitying for a physical existence. We never knew what it was to long to earn our bread by the sweat of our brow and never be able to crunch a crumb.

Even murder, the worst of crimes, has degrees of turpitude. God pity the man who is placed in the awful position of one who realizes that he has to slay his brother or die himself. God pity the starving shipwrecked sailor who crouches upon the edge of a raft in the middle of the Atlantic ocean watching his companion at the other side of the raft, who is hunger mad like himself, God pity him as he leaps forward as a tiger might leap upon the back of a trembling fawn and buries his teeth in the jugular vein of his friend and drinks the flowing blood in fiendish glee as the ravenous lioness would bury her teeth in the soft flesh of a rabbit or a fat prairie dog. I tell you, my friends, that we have different standards of judgment for sin. It makes a great deal of difference how he condemns us for sin if, on the one hand, we, like Lot's wife, have financial plenty and if, on the other hand, we are poor, hungry enough to work for work and no means of earning any kind of a living livelihood. To sin for pleasure and to sin because we do not know which way to turn for food are two entirely different propositions in God's economy.

Oh, the, temptations that come to some men on account of their struggles for a physical existence! I was never more impressed with the awfulness of such temptations than when reading this graphic story. Some years after the overthrow of Napoleon a banquet was being given in London to the British soldiers who had fought under Wellington at Waterloo. During their dinner the old commander, then the richest man in the land, took out of his pocket a beautifully jeweled snuffbox which had been presented to him by his sovereign. In order that his companions in arms might see it he passed it down the table. A short time after Wellington asked where it was, and no one could find it. The jeweled snuffbox had disappeared. Of course all the officers present felt that there was a thief among them. Some one proposed that the doors be locked and every one searched. Much to the surprise of the company, an honored member of the line regiment refused to be searched. Evidence, of circumstance pointed to him as the guilty man, but on account of old associations' sake Wellington let him go.

That night when the great duke was undressing for bed much to his surprise he found the jeweled snuffbox in his pocket. It had not been stolen. He had absentmindedly thrust it into his pocket. At once Wellington ordered his carriage and rode to the residence of the disappointed colonel. In and out of the streets he went until his coachman drew up before a poor tenement house. He ascended the dirty, rickety stairs and found his old companion living in poverty and squalor. He threw his arms about the colonel's neck and begged his pardon. Then he said, "Colonel, why did you not let us search you and free you from the suspicion of the theft?" The colonel answered the colonel, "though I am poor, I am honest. Both my wife and children have not had enough to eat for months. Most they have not had for a week. Many times we were eating I slipped the most off my plate and hid it in my pockets, that they might eat it after I was gone. I was under the temptations of sin, which must continually abide with such starving men and, the humanest of us, how can we judge such sinners differently from the way in which we will condemn our sins. Like Lot's wife, we have had our physical necessities supplied. Aye, almost all of us have had more than the necessities. God has given to us many luxuries as well. When we entered into sin we were there to seek pleasure, and not for the necessities of food and clothing. We sinned because we wanted to be rich, because in one sense we felt we had to sin to live.

Like Lot's wife, are we? Most of us say, all-sufficient, that we have a direction of a Christian home. I know not whether this woman was born in a godly cradle and reared in a pious home. I know not whether we have had godly parents who taught to say their evening prayers at their mother's knee. But I do know that as soon as she married she went to a godly home. Lot, her husband, was a man's foster child and nephew. His father died when he was very young. Abraham and Sarah had no children; therefore they adopted this orphannephew. His mother was dead and they brought him up as their own son. No sooner did Lot bring home his new bride than he pitched his tent, as had this old gray-haired patriarch Abraham, welcome her to his home. I can see his place his hand upon her head and say: "My child, I welcome thee in the name of the Lord. I welcome thee as my daughter." Methinks I see how Sarah take the young girl in her arms and press her to her bosom as a pious, a holy kiss upon her fresh young lips. That night, as usual, the aged couple and the young pair bent the knee in one knee by the old folks' side. Step by step God led this wife to taught to trust God and to live for eternity. She was in God's little children. She is not a cannibal on the Congo, taught from her infancy that the best banquet she can have is the quivering flesh of a captive whom her husband has brought home in chains! She is not an East Indian, who thinks the best offering she can make to the gods is the bleeding heart of a human sacrifice torn out from the ribs of a pleading supplicant. She is a child of the covenant, having lived at least for years amid the highest and noblest of godly surroundings. She was destroyed because she refused to obey the teachings of God which she learned from her father-in-law and mother-in-law.

But do the lessons of Lot's wife end here? No. Drawing near to-day to the Abrahamic encampment we see the great strife and turmoil. The herdmen of Lot and Abraham, uncle of his uncle are in bitter strife. Perhaps the cause of the quarrel was down at the well where they went for drinking water. Perhaps the struggle was due to some shepherd persisting in his claims that he had a right to the grass of every valley. Anyway, the row was on, and the employes appealed to their masters for settlement of the difficulty. That evening Abraham and his nephew came to a determined to part. They came to the conclusion that as their flocks were so great and the pasture so large they could better separate and each go his own way. But Abraham, with the one parental spirit, said to his foster son: "Now, you can have your choice of the land for your future home. Then, after you have made your selection I will take what is left."

Then what happens? The Bible says that Lot went to Sodom because the grass was rich and fertile and green. But reading between the lines I think I can find other reasons for the choice. That night when the great tent of the encampment was asleep I see the lights burning in Lot's tent. I hear a woman in earnest conversation with her husband. She is talking about like this: "Lot, I am tired of our life living in a tent all our lives? We have lots to keep and horses and cattle. We are rich. We can do what we like. You can let the overseers look after the flocks, but our life easy and have some fun. Why not go down to Sodom and mingle in the society of wealthy and refined and aristocratic people? Our girls are growing fast and need a 'coming out' party. Oh, I know there are wicked people living down there, but because they are bad we need not necessarily have to be very bad. Besides, there are, I believe, some of those big merchants of Sodom who stopped with us last year on their way to Damascus? Their wives are very genteel people. They moved in the best society, and they come to me to come to Sodom to live, and they seem to be very fond of their friends. Come, let us go and live in Sodom. The grass is good in the plains of Jordan. There we can find good pasture for the flocks and herds and have lots of pleasure besides." Such Lot and his wife went to live in Sodom. Why?

Can you find one circumstance, one ground for hope of spiritual development, that could have induced Lot and his wife to have gone to live in Sodom or Gomorrah? What Pompeii and Herculaneum were to the pagan Romans these vile cities were to the inhabitants of the east. Their sins were so vile and awful and debasing that no public teacher of the day dare mention them or write them for print. To-day as you walk among the ruins of Pompeii you see the most revolting and disgusting pictures painted upon the walls, which prove how the inhabitants of the aristocratic suburbs of Rome lived in their open debauches. Such were the inhabitants of Sodom. They made no pretense to secrecy. They not only sinned, but they gloried in their sins. They published their sins every where. They practiced them openly. Yet into this very place where Lot and his wife, with their two daughters, deliberately decided to dwell after they had left the sweet, holy fellowship of Abraham's home. My brothers and sisters, are your companions to-day evil companions? Are they men and women who sin and sin openly? Are they inhabitants of the evil cities of the plain?

Man, how is it about that club? I do not say all men's clubs are bad. But some certainly are bad. Is your club made up of Christian members? When you go there do you feel you are honoring Christ? Do you ever hear the lewd joke, the vile story, the drunken blasphemy, there? Do you associate there with men who are neglecting their homes and who are accustomed to speak lightly of woman's purity and the sacred nobility of motherhood? Wife, how is it with your associates? For years you have been struggling to get into "society." What "society?" The "society" of Sodom or of Nazareth? The "society" of wives and daughters who are trying to make the world better through Christ or the "society" of avowed worldlings? Why did Lot's wife long to associate with the sinful inhabitants of the cities of the plain? Why are you, O men and women, struggling to associate with people who have not a gambling, drinking, card playing, dancing, Sabbath breaking and God dishonoring set? If you are deliberately compromising with such associates you are like Lot's wife, living in the midst of the wicked in the evil cities of the plain.

Now we come to the great climax of these symbols. Lot's wife was halfway converted. She was in exactly the same position as you were when you lost your baby. You knelt by that casket and said, "Oh, God, give me back my baby!" God said to you: "Yes, dear, I will give you back your baby if you will flee that 'city of sin' I have taken your baby as a beautiful flower just growing by the sinful quagmires and the worldly destructive mildew and swamps. I have plucked her and planted her in the beautiful flower garden of heaven near to the riyer of life. She will live as my child and turn your back upon sin and be born into my heavenly gardens and lift up your heart to one as rose of Sharon to your lips." Then you said, "Lord, I will come! I will come!" Or were you like Lot's wife, because you were a few years ago in the surgeon's room at the dissecting table, under the influence of a great revival. It may have been in the village or city church. The glorious movement as a great tidal wave swept over that community and carried your heart with it. You were converted, your children, upon the Rock of Ages in the midst of the great sea of sin. Yes, you were all deeply moved. You turned to flee from the inhabitants of Pompeii fled when the volcanic vitus was belching forth her stream of hot lava and lighting the heavens as with the destructive flames of hell. But, like Lot's wife, after you had started a little way from your old companions of sin and your evil haunts you began to soliloquize. You said to yourself: "What is the good of my running away from sin? Can't I look back and enjoy the sight just for once? Cannot I go back and have one more carnival with evil?" As Lot's wife looked back after you look back and you long to flee with her husband and daughters from the "city of sin" you looked back, and you were lost.

Oh, friends, can it be, after you have once started for the "city of God," that you look back into the "city of sin" toward the "city of Death?" "An old Christian legend," says Dr. Baxendale, "tells us that the mountain of Calvary can be compared to a high mountain, on the top of which is a palace filled with all treasures—with every delight—with paradise of pleasure. Up its sides men and women are climbing to reach the top, but every one who looks back is turned into stone. And yet thousands of evil spirits are around the climbers, whispering, shouting, offering their treasures, singing their love songs to those who turn from the palace at the top and to make them look back." Such is the history of your Christian life. Like Lot's wife, you started away from Sodom. You began to climb the hills of safety. But you looked back. You turned looked back. My apostate friend, can it be, after you have once started for the "city of God," that you will linger longer by the "city of Death?" Can it be that a second call, like that of Lot's call, is not coming to you in this morning's sermon to escape the divine safety? Will you heed the call to-day?

But I cannot close these suggestions without one more thought. Christian church members are having fled from the "city of destruction," will you not try to persuade others to flee with you? You must think to be saved yourself, you must also try to save others. If Lot's wife had by the power of the Holy Spirit saved ten others she would have saved all in the evil cities of the plain. If all of us who are professing Christians will save ten souls each for Christ it will not be long before the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth, even as the waters cover the sea. Are you that too much for Christ. Is that too much for God? It is not too much if you and I heart and soul have consecrated our lives for the service of our Master. If we each save ten souls a year for Christ we can save Sodom. When God determined to exterminate the cities of the plain Abraham said: O Lord, will thou destroy the righteous with the wicked? If there are fifty righteous, will thou save Sodom for the fifty's sake? If forty-five, for the forty-five's sake? If ten, for the ten righteous' sake?" The Lord said, "Yes, I will save Sodom for ten righteous' sake." Then Abraham arose from his knees and in all probability said: "Now I will go down to Sodom and visit my friends and my brother friends. I will get all the names of the people with whom she is identified in religious work, and I will take them a whole town full of salvation for the ten righteous' sake."

The old man comes to the city. He is welcomed by his aristocratic foster daughter. He says to her, "My child, where live the godly people whom you have led to repentance?" "Why, uncle," she answers, "to tell the truth, I do not know if any of my neighbors and society friends are saved or not. Yesterday I was at the great chariot race, but there we only saw fine horse. Last week I attended court, but there we only talked politics. I do not know if even one of my friends is a godly people living in Sodom. During the past few years I have lived here I have not brought one of my friends to God." Is Lot's wife's answer your answer? Church members, will you not during the next year at least try to bring ten immortal souls to Christ? Is it too much to ask for? Why, you have saved Sodom. The Christian people of this country can bring this city and this nation to Jesus Christ in a year if they each will bring ten souls a year to Jesus. Is it too much to ask for Christ? Ten souls per year for each member. Is it too much to ask for Christ?

When Doctors Failed

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Brought New Health and Strength.

From The Post, Thorold, Ont.

Mr. Reuben Lindsay, a fruit grower at Ridgeville, Ont., is one of the best known men in that section, having lived in the vicinity of its vicinity all his life. All Mr. Lindsay's neighbors know that about a year ago his condition of health was very serious. To use his own words he "began to go to pieces—was all wasting away." A reporter of the Thorold Post called on Mr. Lindsay recently, he found him again enjoying the best of health, and when asked what had wrought his cure, he replied very emphatically "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills; they did for me what medical treatment and other medicines failed to do. In the spring of 1903," continued Mr. Lindsay, "I grew so weak that I could barely move about. My appetite completely failed me, and I seemed to be wasting away to a mere shadow. I grew so weak that I could not work, and could scarcely walk after my horses without resting. I doctored with two or three good physicians, but got no permanent benefit, in fact they seemed doubtful what was the matter with me. One said liver trouble, another kidney disease. I thought the trouble was it was rapidly wasting away. A neighbor who had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills with benefit, advised me to try them, but I felt somewhat skeptical, having been disappointed so often before, but finally decided to try them, and before I had finished the second box I felt quite an improvement. I continued using the pills until I had taken some twelve boxes when I was again enjoying robust health. I have no hesitation in saying that I believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life. Remember my former unbelief in these pills, and gladly give this testimonial in the hope that it may induce some other sufferer to try this great, health giving medicine."

People will speedily find new health and strength through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Every dose makes new, rich, red blood coursing through the veins, and that is why these pills cure such diseases as rheumatism, neuralgia, indigestion, kidney and liver troubles, rheumatism, and all other diseases having their origin in poor blood or shattered nerves, and the special ailments that make the lives of so many girls and young women of all ages miserable. See that the genuine "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" is printed on the wrapper around each box. If in doubt, you can get the pills by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

They Are Not Violent in Action. Some persons, when they wish to take a cathartic, resort to Epsom and other purgative salts. These are violent in their action, but produce no permanent good. Their use produces nelgient chills, and if persisted in they injure the stomach. There is no more effectual substitute for Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets than Nature's own remedy, Dandelion, in this respect, and have no equal.

SHOT HER MOTHER DEAD.

Cornwall, April 30th—A loaded 32-calibre revolver kept in the house in the residence of Arthur Shillis, Strathmore, caused the death of Mrs. David Woods of Cornwall township, mother of Mrs. Shillis, about 2 o'clock on Saturday morning. Mrs. Woods had been visiting at Mr. Shillis' for a few days. Her daughter, Mrs. Thompson, since Thursday. She intended leaving for her home on Saturday morning, and was preparing in the bedroom occupied by her mother. When Mrs. Schellis opened a trunk to get some wearing apparel. The revolver was in the trunk and the young woman picked it up to wipe some rust off it with her apron. In so doing she probably touched the trigger, for the weapon went off and the bullet entered Mrs. Woods' head just below the right ear bone, cutting the left cheek-bone, and lodging in the left cheek-bone. Mrs. Woods fell back into the bed and died in a few minutes from internal hemorrhage. Dr. McIntosh, of Apple Hill, was at once summoned by Mr. Shillis, but the spark of life had fled ere his arrival.

COLD SETTLER IN THE BACK.

It hits you in the most tender spot and makes it mighty hard to brace up. Nine times in ten it comes out of your spare cash account. Then it comes out of your health account. Then it comes so soon. Neuriline penetrates. Cures at the first application. Is twice stronger than ordinary remedies. Neuriline cures backache, sciatica, lumbago, sciatica and neuralgia. Neuriline kills pain. Neuriline is almost like pain. For nearly fifty years it has been the best selling liniment in Canada. Better try it.

MAY CANADIAN MAGAZINE

Several military articles give a sort of military flavor to the May Canadian Magazine. "The Militia Outlook," by Lieut.-Colonel Otter; "Militia Notes," by Captain H. F. Wyatt; "The Militia Council," by Lieut.-Col. Lessard; "The Personnel of the Council," by Colonel Sir Frederick Borden; "Militia Law," by Benjamin Sulte—all these articles are timely and valuable. Other valuable features are equally attractive. R. E. McConaughey writes on "Life and Labor in the West in a three-page poem, with suitable illustrations. That is a delightful Canadian journalist, who is travelling in South America, contributes an interesting sketch of Venezuela which is accompanied by a number of interesting photographs. Alfred Fitzpatrick writes on the story of "Neglected Citizen in the Camps," and what is being done to improve this moral and educational advancement. Dr. Parkin has a very valuable article in the issue is "Electoral Management." Mr. J. A. Fox, M.P., describes an ideal method for organizing and conducting a campaign in a way as to avoid political corruption. The fiction is satisfying. That by Theodore Goodridge Roberts, by Arthur Heming, by Owen Smith, Eric Bohn, Theodore Roberts and Jean Blewett is interesting. The poetry and the departments are excellent.

A puny child is always an anxiety to the parents. Sometimes the cause is no reason why the little one should be weak when it is so well fed. But the fact is that it often is the result of how much the child takes it the stomach cannot extract the best nourishment from it. No benefit can be derived from the feeding. That is the condition of many a sickly child. The stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition are not doing their work, and the body is really starving. It is time to use to give flab foods, like cod liver oil or some other fat producer. In such cases these also have to be digested; they don't always strengthen it. Strength is what the system requires. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery increases the nerves and digestive forces and gives the body healing and building up elements. It is superior to every other preparation of cod liver oil on account of its body building qualities, and also because it is free from the taints and contains no alcohol, whiskey or opium. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are a valuable aid when biliousness or constipation exists. They are small. Children take them readily.

"OUTDOOR CANADA."

This is the attractive name of a new magazine which makes its appearance in the Canadian field. "OUTDOOR CANADA" will be printed on a good quality of paper, such as is used in the best illustrations being run and will have special reports and articles dealing with all the sports and pastimes of outdoor Canada, and among these will be articles on Motoring, Yachting, Golf, Bowling, Curling, Cricket, Rugby Football, Lacrosse, Hunting, Shooting, Fishing, Riding, etc. Your only hope of amusements as well as descriptions of Canada's sport and Canadian tales of adventure.

Among the list of authors for 1905 will be found names well known to Canadian magazine readers, such as those of John Innes, C. G. D. Roberts, Agnes C. Mcortimer, John Boyd, Frank Yeigh, Hubert McHenry, Arthur Heming, Theodore Goodridge, J. M. Bell, C. G. Rogers, R. O. McCulloch and a host of others.

The publishers appear to be acknowledging in the future of the fullest success to make "OUTDOOR CANADA" a Canadian institution, and it is to be hoped that the magazine will receive from the Canadian public the support which it deserves.

HOW TO AVOID GERM DISEASES.

STRENGTHEN THE STOMACH AND DIGESTION, AND YOU WILL KEEP WELL.

When there is an epidemic germ disease, and most diseases are caused by germs, it is the person with a weak stomach who succumbs first.

People with healthy digestion are ordinarily not subject to sickness, and can throw off readily any disease germs that enter the system.

Strengthen the stomach and digestive organs with a Mi-o-na tablet before each meal, and every atom of food taken into the stomach will be digested and assimilated, and the whole digestive system made so healthy, clean and sweet that ther will be no chance for disease germs to breed.

If you suffer with pains or distress after eating, headache, belching of gases, sour food, a bad taste in the mouth, dizziness, pains in the back, specks before the eyes, and a general feeling of despondency and weakness, you should get well at once by strengthening the stomach with Mi-o-na. Just one 1amall tablet out of a fifty cent box before eating, and your digestive troubles will become so strong that you will be the embodiment of good health and spirits, and need fear no germ diseases.

Ask T. B. Wallace to show you the guarantee under which he sells Mi-o-na; it costs nothing unless it cures.

It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to effect a cure.

An End to Bilious Headache.—Biliousness, which is caused by excessive acidity in the stomach, has a marked effect upon the nerves, and often manifests itself by severe headache. This is the most distressing headache one can have. There are few headaches from fever, and from other causes, but the most excruciating of all is bilious headache. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will cure it—cure it almost instantly. It will appear as soon as the Pills operate. There is nothing equal to the treatment of bilious headache.

Fred Membery's Letter.

Chicago, Ill., April 25th, '05.

Dear Beaver,—Yesterday I viewed the monument of Stephen A. Douglas, at the foot of 35th street, on Lake Michigan, with the Illinois Central Railway tracks along the shore a few hundred feet from the statue, which is a grand one, 100 feet high, in Douglas Park, a square piece of ground of about one mile of walks, roads and lawns. This man was the Democratic candidate against Abraham Lincoln for President of the United States in 1861—defeated, and died the next year. The monument is at the base 35 feet across each way and a square mass of granite in that—50 feet across or more, fifteen feet high, with a room in the centre eight feet each square, and eight feet high, with a heavy iron bar gate in the east side, fronting the lake, which a person can look through into the afore-mentioned space and there see the white marble coffin in this room, resting on the base containing the body of Stephen A. Douglas. This marble box lid is fully sealed down, and the inscription upon it thus, "Stephen A. Douglas, born April 23d, 1813, died June 30, 1861."

Tell my children to obey the law and uphold the constitution.

He once owned sixty-three acres of land, which is now covered with buildings upon it now, and when he took the same to the city of Chicago, only being twenty-six years old, and after he erected some of the first hundred each way from the centre of the city, along the lake shore and extending westward from fifteen to twenty miles, mostly. I am told, erected this monument in honor of him and gave the park to the city for recreation and play ground for children, and invalid women to use and enjoy the beautiful lawns and flowers of which plenty could be seen there yesterday, especially children, the body brought as described, and his granite image at the top, standing as in the act of speaking the sentence inscribed on the base, "Let us have peace."

Yesterday's papers are full of the defalcation of the President of the First National Bank of Milwaukee of over three million dollars, caused by speculations in wheat, and through confidence in the "John W. Gates" corner of wheat for May, but the Armour brothers were too much for Gates and the banker too which millions of wheat cost them $1.15 per bushel and touch 93 cents yesterday, which finish broke, up. Here a few years ago, keep away from wheat in Chicago is my advice. I will send you a paper with full account of the crash by this mail.

I had a ride down town in an automobile yesterday, nine or ten miles and it is fine, fine indeed. The finest first class in Canada, and I have seen but the greater portion of them as specific. Some of them will run forty miles an hour. Last night three men in a $2,000 auto car, going thirty-five miles an hour on Grand Boulevard, taking a corner ran against a tree and came to a full stop, causing $200 damages to the car, and about the last men seen of the senate, to know that if the auto is not managed right, it will get into trouble. Autoists beware or you may be fined.

While repairing some ropes above the grinder, he slipped and fell in, and in a moment was reduced to an unrecognizable mass of human flesh mixed with clothing. RIKLEY—GILBERT.

A very pretty event took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Morley White, of Parma, on the evening of April 19th, when Miss Agnes Gilbert, of Selkirk, and Mr. Herbert Rikley, of Hayburn, were married. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. Thomas, in the presence of a number of invited relatives and friends. The bride was attended by her niece, Miss Edna Gilbert, while Mr. Herbert Chalmers supported the groom. After the ceremony hearty congratulations were extended, and the guests were invited to partake of a sumptuous repast, after which Mr. and Mrs. Rikley left for their new home at The Pines.

LAKE-ON-THE-MOUNTAIN.

Picton Gazette: Thursday afternoon, Mr. Farmer, of the Bank of Montreal, and H. C. Kennedy, fathomed a portion of the Lake-on-the-Mountain. They used a ten pound weight for the purpose. At the south end, and in about the centre of the lake they found a hole ninety-three feet deep and about four rods square. In the composition at the bottom of this hole the weight would sink at the rate of five feet per minute. Their line not being considered strong and the suction so great, they were not certain how far the weight would sink. It is thought that possibly this is one of the large feeders of the lake. They were told at the Consera mills that about one-half mile further west a hole of similar nature one hundred and fifty feet deep had been found.

LOS ANGELES MARRIAGE.

Daisty in all its appointments was the wedding of Miss A. Amelia Bell and William Cranston, which took place at the home of the bride's uncle, Mr. Edward Fraser, West Washington st., Rev. Robert P. Howell, of Union Ave. Methodist church, officiating. The parlor was effectively decorated wholly with white carnations, smilax and ferns, while the color scheme of the dining room and hall was red interspersed with greenery. One of the features of the decoration was the bride's table which was a creation of beauty, consisting of catables and flowers centred by the attractive wedding cake. The bride was charmingly attired in white organdy made with bertha and yoke of lace. Her hair was tastefully dressed with orange blossoms and white satin bows, and carried a shower bouquet of white roses. Mr. Ulysses Boynton presided at the piano and while rendering Mendelssohn's wedding march, the bride entered the parlor on the arm of her uncle through an isle of white satin ribbon formed by four little flower girls, Misses Vivian Howell, Eunice Arena, Myra Corbin and Bessie Deming. These were dressed in white and carried baskets of flowers from which they scattered rose petals for the bridal party. Immediately following the flower girls and preceding the bride came little Miss Dorothy Park bearing the ring in a lily. The bride and groom met under three-floral bells hanging from the archway where the nuptial knot was tied, and where the congratulations were received. Mr. Boynton played very sweetly during the entire ceremony. After forty guests witnessed the ceremony and partook of the wedding supper. The bride received beautiful gifts of cut glass and silverware from her Los Angeles friends, and her uncle's presents were most numerous, useful and costly. Mrs. Cranston will reside at the home of her uncle until their own home on 20th street is completed.

The bride and groom are both well known here in social and educational life, the bride having taught school for four years in Napanee. She is the daughter of Mr. A. P. Bell, of Desmond, and the groom's father was the late Lewis Cranston, of Newburgh.

MAUD BALLINGTON BOOTH

The Story of One Woman's Work for Humanity

One of the greatest philanthropists of the United States is Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth, whose life has been lovingly consecrated to the cause of humanity. In the nineteenth century, Elizabeth Fry, famous as "the prisoners' friend," made existence easier for the prisoners of England while they were paying the price of their crimes. In the twentieth century, Mrs. Booth gives to the prisoners of America a new chances to battle honestly with the world, when the prison gates open outward to let them again into the sunlight.

Mrs. Booth, the daughter of an Episcopalian clergyman, was born at Lympsefield, England. When she was three years old her father, Rev. Samuel Charlesworth, moved to a large parish in the East End of London, where, amid misery and poverty, he found a noble field of usefulness. The first barracks the Salvation Army ever had was opposite the rectory, and Mrs. Charlesworth, a broad-minded, large-hearted woman, often took her children across the street to the mission services.

Maud, a beautiful young girl of fifteen, upon whose mind spiritual truths had made little real impression, suddenly had her heart touched by the services one night, and the great privilege of living the highest life and helping others to live it came to her with the luminance of a revelation. Two years later she became a soldier in the Army and did splendid work with General Booth's eldest daughter in France and Switzerland, and among their many adventures they were expelled from the canton of Geneva.

Then came the romance, on her marriage to Ballington Booth, they were sent to the United States, where they carried on a most successful campaign on aggressive lines for the Salvation Army. In 1896, owing to a difference of opinion with General Booth as to the policy of the internal management of the work directed at long distance from London, Mrs. Booth and her husband resigned from the Army and organized the "Volunteers of America," of which the "Volunteer Prisoners' League" is but a part.

This latter phase of the crusade of helpfulness, with all its financial burden, its round of visits, its organization and plans, has fallen on the shoulders of Mrs. Booth. Of the 66,000 prisoners in the State institutions given, there are to-day 14,000 members, and when the prisoners leave their cells they have an influence to secure honest labor, and a helping hand and inspiring environment while struggling toward better things.

CHAPTER I.

LADY TOZER adjusted her gold rimmed eyeglasses with an air of dignified aggressiveness. She had lived two many years in the far east. In Hongkong she was known as the "Mandarin." Her powers of merciless inquisition suggested torments long drawn out. The commander of the Sirdar, homeward bound from Shanghai, knew that he was about to be stretched on the rack when he took his seat at the saloon table.

"Is it true, captain, that we are running into a typhoon?" demanded her ladyship.

"From whom did you learn that, Lady Tozer?" Captain Ross was wary, though somewhat surprised.

"From Miss Deane. I understood her a moment ago to say that you had told her."

"Didn't you? Some one told me this morning. I couldn't have guessed it, could I?" Miss Iris Deane's large blue eyes surveyed him with innocent indifference to strict accuracy. Incidentally she had obtained the information from her maid, a nose tilted cockney, extracted ships' secrets from a youthful quartermaster.

"Well—as I had forgotten," explained the tactful sailor.

"It is true?"

Lady Tozer was unusually abrupt today. But she was annoyed by the assumption that the captain took a mere girl into his confidence and passed over the wife of the ex-chief justice of Hongkong.

"Yes, it is," said Captain Ross, equally curt, and silently thanking the fates that her ladyship was going home for the last time.

"Do tell us," chimed in Iris. "Did you find out when you squinted at the sun?"

The captain smiled. "You are nearer the mark than possibly you imagine, Miss Deane," he said. "When we took our observations yesterday there was a very distant cloud hanging low toward the sun. This morning you may have noticed several light squalls and a smooth sea, marked occasionally by strong ripples. The barometer is falling rapidly, and I expect that as the day wears we will encounter a heavy swell. Then, as well as helping a steamer to ride, possibly if we observe a heavy bank of cloud approaching from the northwest, you will see the crockery dancing about the table of itself. I am afraid you are not a good sailor, Lady Tozer. Are you, Miss Deane?"

"Capital! I should just love to see a real storm, and promise me solemnly that you will take me up into the chart house when this typhoon is simply tearing things to pieces."

"Oh, dear! I hope it will not be very bad. Is there no way in which you can avoid it, captain? Will it last long?" wailed her ladyship.

The politic skipper for once preferred to answer Lady Tozer. "There is no cause for uneasiness," he said. "Of course typhoons in the China seas are nasty things while they last, but a ship like the Sirdar is not troubled by them. She will drive through the worst gale she is likely to meet here in less than twelve hours. Besides, I alter the course somewhat as soon as I discover our position with regard to its center."

Then the commander hurriedly excused himself, and the passengers saw no more of him that day.

Her ladyship dismissed the topic as of no present interest and focused Miss Deane through her eyeglasses.

"Sir Arthur proposes to come home in June, I understand?" she inquired.

Iris was a remarkably healthy young woman. A large mouth momentarily engaged her attention. She nodded affably.

"You will stay with relatives until he arrives?" pursued Lady Tozer.

"Relatives! We have done—none whom we specially cultivate—that is, I will stop in town a day or two to interview my dressmaker and then go straight to Hefindale, our place in Yorkshire."

"Precisely you have a chaperon?"

"A chaperon! My dear Lady Tozer, did my father impress you as one who would permit a fussy and stout old person to make my life miserable?"

The acidity of the retort lay in the word "stout." But Iris was not accustomed to cross examination. During a three months' residence on the island she had learned how to avoid Lady Tozer. Here it was impossible, and the elder woman fastened upon her sap-like. Miss Iris Deane was a toothsome morsel for gossip. Not yet twenty-one, the only daughter of a wealthy baronet who owned a fleet of stately Hewitt, market; auditors, A. Alexander and James Eras. The auditors report $15 99 in the treasurer's hands. There was no cheese boarded, and we understand there has been considerable April cheese contracted for at 11c per pound.

WORTH TRYING.

This is worth giving a trial. An exchange referring to the trade that goes from their town to the departmental stores and wonders to take the catalogues of these big city firms to their local merchants and point out what goods they want and see if the local merchant cannot give them just as good and just as cheap. If not, then it will be time enough to send to the city for the goods if you feel like doing so, but the local man should be given a first opportunity to supply you on every occasion. That has been done on several occasions in town, and the purchasers actually bought the goods they wanted cheaper than they could get them from Toronto's departmental store.

WILL RETURN TO THE EAST.

Astoria Daily News, Oregon, April 29

Messrs. Barry Sylvester, George W. Jones and Aubrey Pringle will tonight close their engagement at the Unique theatre. The trio filled a previous engagement in this city, with much success, and the latter have been crowded every night during the week. These clever singers are now well known in this city, and their return will be anxiously awaited by a host of friends. From Astoria they go to Tacoma and other cities of the sound, thence to Butte and on east to Chicago. Northern theatrical managers will remember them as the most popular vaudeville performers who have ever appeared, and an appreciative public will not soon forget their pleasing vocal work.

SELF-DENIAL WEEK.

The well known self-denial week of the Salvation Army is being observed by that body from May 6th to 13th. Unusual activity has taken possession of the Army's energetic members in anticipation of this great sweet. The Army's beneficent operations are sustained purely by the free-will offerings of the people. The needs of its vast missionary labors among the heathen abroad and the down-fallen at home are chiefly met through the agency of self-denial. The Army is doing splendid work in its industrial Homes, Rescue Homes, Men's and Woman's shelters, establishing in different centres all this country, while the world over, the Army has about 500 similar refuges for the fallen and destitute. The Self Denial fund is considerably augmented by assistance from outside friends far and near, and this worthy effort should not be forgotten by those who are in a position to assist. We wish the Army every success.

THE COXALL CO.

CURLERS' CONCERT.

The annual concert under the auspices of the Napanee Curling Club has become one of the most popular events of the season, and calls out all classes of our citizens. The concert and entertainment in the Opera House last Thursday night was largely attended, and proved in every way a decided success. The first portion of the programme was entirely musical, and introduced to the public two new claimants for popularity, Miss B Stratton Harrison, vocal soloist and violinist, and Mrs. H. Taylor, the other numbers given being by Miss Laella Hall and Mr. Frank Henwood. The programme was of a high order, and each number was encored. Miss Hall's piano solo was rendered with rare taste and expression. She also proved an excellent accompanist, and aided materially in making the first part of the performance the great success it proved to be. Miss Harrison has a highly cultivated and very true and sweet voice, and on the violin brought out tones and chords which are seldom heard from the average player. Mrs. Taylor proved a great favorite, and is a decided acquisition to Napanee musical circles. Mr. Frank Henwood was in good voice, and rendered his sea song with much spirit. The audience was now all anxiety for the second part of the entertainment, and had not long to wait. The play, "Woodcock's Little Game," is a laughable farce-comedy in two acts, and under the careful training and supervision of Mr. Dudley L. Hill, was put on the boards in a most creditable manner. That all did their parts well was amply evidenced by the rounds of applause that greeted the talented amateurs. Mr. Hill was certainly the star of the occasion. His blase manner and desire to escape from the whirl of fashionable society and functions, was admirably carried out, and his terror of his masculine mother-in-law, brought down the house. Woodcock's little scheme was a good one, and Mr. Hill made the most of it.

Miss Maddox took the part of the sweet young bride with much tact, although her mother as usual left her but little to say or do, but took pretty and subnit gracefully to her machinations.

Mrs. Croskery, as Mrs. Lieut.-Col. Carver, seemed to grasp the situation thoroughly, and in her wheedling of her plastic son-in-law, kept the audience in good humor and enacted the delicate role splendidly.

Miss Williams, Mrs. Larkins, with her fine stage presence and winning manner, captivated the audience. She shows marked histrionic talent.

Miss Hewett took the part of Susan, the housemaid, most efficiently. Her desperate attempt to escape the amorous embrace of Mr. Woodcock was most laughable.

Messrs. Bruce Williams, (Larkins), Frank Henwood (Swansdown) and Rasmuel Dirsche, (Woodcock's servant), all took their parts admirably and much made a hit.

Napanee is fortunate in possessing such talented amateurs, and should Mr. Hill at some future date, decide to give an another exhibition of his ability in this line, he is sure of a crowded house. The costumes of the ladies were much admired.

The proceeds amounted to $116 00, and after the expenses are deducted, the Curling Club will have quite a sum to add to their funds. They also wish to thank the ladies and gentlemen who took part in the concert for their kindly efforts to give the public a delightful entertainment and assist the club.

TO PREVENT CONSUMPTION.

Hard to cure; easy to prevent. Scott's Emulsion nourishes the body, keeps all the organs and tissues healthy, and the consumption germs can not get a foothold. 19b

Mrs. Wagar was a daughter of the late Michael Huffman, and was born and brought up on the farm now owned by Mr. Chas. H Dunwoody, South Napanee. She was a kindly christian woman, deeply attached to her home and family, and a consistent member of the Methodist church. Her husband predeceased her several years. An old and respected resident of North Fredericksburgh, died very suddenly on March 11th, 1905. Deceased was born in the County of Antrim, near Belfast, Ireland, in the year 1836, and came to Canada when twelve years old, and settled with his father's family in the Township of South Fredericksburgh. He was married in 1857 to Miss Melissa Hough, who predeceased him a few years ago. In his early life he resided for a short time at Morven and then removed to North Fredericksburgh, where he spent the remainder of his life. Deceased was converted under the ministry of the late David Wilson, at Parks' Chapel, Hay Bay, and joined the Methodist church in which he was an active worker, having held the position of class leader and Sabbath School teacher, both at Hay Bay and afterwards at Bethany church, near where he spent the later years of his life. Mr. Galt was an upright and honorable citizen, highly esteemed by those who had the pleasure of his friendship and acquaintance. The church has lost a valuable member, and his family a kind and loving father. Two sons, H. H. If a man's wife is a good baker, nothing but the best flour is good enough for her. There can be no greater extravagance than the use of inferior flour.

Winchester Springs, Feb. 27th, 05.

"I read about Royal Household Flour which is purified by electricity. I also read about the woman paying freight 25 miles before she would be without it. Royal Household was not sold in our town, I was asking about it and my grocer told me to wait a day or two and he would get some, and I am glad I did so. My wife is a good baker and made good bread out of other flours, but what she has now made out of Royal Household is so far ahead that I would be willing to pay freight fifty miles instead of twenty-five, rather than go without it. There is no flour 'just as good' as Royal Household."

(Signed) JOHN HENDERSON.

Now, is there a single woman in the whole country who, after reading what Mr. Henderson says, will not at once send for the Royal Household recipes and give Royal Household Flour a trial. Mention this paper and address

MRS. JOHN HORNER.

Sudden indeed did the Angel of Death take one from our midst. The call came to a much respected neighbor and friend, in the person of Mrs. John Horner, of Adolphustown, on Wednesday, May 3d. Mrs. Horner was seriously ill only a few days, and very few of her friends knew of her illness, her death coming as a very severe shock to all. The deceased was the daughter of Mr. John Furse, being the youngest (only 32 years of age), of a large family. Three sisters and three brothers remain, besides her aged father, all of whom were present to pay their last respects. She also leaves behind, a sorrowing husband and a little daughter about three years of age. She will be sadly missed in the home circle by all, and more especially by her aged father, to whom she has been untiring in her devotion during his serious illness of the past four weeks. The neighbors also regret her departure to the better world as her pleasant manner won her many friends. But we must remember that we may all meet again if we so wish as a Home in Heaven is given to all who seek it through our Lord and Christ. The funeral took place on Friday last at 1 o'clock, the services being held at the house, conducted by Rev. Mr. Thomas, and was largely attended. The remains were placed in the U.E.L. Methodist cemetery.

The Wings of the Morning

ships—the Sirdar among them—a girl who had been mistress of her father's house since her return from Dresden three years ago—young, beautiful, rich—here was a combination for which men thanked a judicious heaven, while women sniffed enviously.

Business detained Sir Arthur. A war cloud overshadowed the two great divisions of the yellow race. He must wait to see how matters developed, but he would not expose Iris to the insidious treachery of a Chinese spring. She was confided to the personal charge of Captain Ross. As each point of call the company's agents would be solicitous for her welfare. The cable's telegraphic eye would watch her progress as that of some princely maiden, sailing in royal carvel. This fair, slender, well formed girl—delightfully English in face and figure—with her fresh, clear complexion, limpid blue eyes and shining hair was a personage of some importance.

Lady Tozer knew these things and sighed complacently.

"Ah, well," she resumed. "Parents had different views when I was a girl. But I assume Sir Arthur thinks you should become used to being your own mistress in view of your approaching marriage."

"My—approaching—marriage!" cried Iris, now genuinely amazed.

"Yes. Is it not true that you are going to marry Lord Ventnor?"

A passing steward heard the point blank question.

It had a curious effect upon him. He gazed with fiercely eager eyes at Miss Deane. And so far forgot himself as to permit a dish of water ice to rest against Sir John Tozer's bald head.

Iris could not help noting the strange behavior. A flash of humor chased away her first angry resentment at Lady Tozer's interrogatory.

"That may be my happy fate," she answered gayly, "but Lord Ventnor has not asked me."

"Every one says in Hongkong"—began her ladyship.

"Confound you, you stupid rascal! What are you doing?" shouted Sir John. His frail nerves at last conveyed the information that something more pronounced than a sudden draft affected his scalp; the ice was melting.

The incident aroused those passengers who sat near enough to observe it. But the chief steward, hovering watchful near the captain's table, darted forward. Pale with anger, he hissed:

"Report yourself for duty in the second saloon tonight." And he hustled his subordinate away from the judge's chair.

Miss Deane, mirthfully radiant, rose. "Please don't punish the man, Mr. Jones," she said sweetly. "It was a sheer accident. He was taken by surprise. In his place I would have emptied the whole dish."

The chief steward smirked. He did not know exactly what had happened. Nevertheless, great though Sir John Tozer might be, the owner's daughter was greater.

"Certainly, miss, certainly," he agreed, adding confidentially: "It is rather hard on a steward to be sent aft, miss. It makes such a difference in the—er—the little gratuities given by the passengers."

The girl was tactful. She smiled comprehension at the official and bent over Sir John, now carefully polishing the back of his skull with a table napkin.

"I am sure you will forgive him," she whispered. "I can't say why, but the poor fellow was looking so intently at me that he did not see what he was doing."

The ex-chief justice was instantly mollified. He did not mind the application of ice in that way—rather liked it, in fact. Probably ice was susceptible to the fire in Miss Deane's eyes.

Suddenly the passengers still seated experienced a prolonged sinking sensation, as if the vessel had been converted into a gigantic lift. They were pressed hard into their chairs, which creaked and tried to swing around on their pivots. As the ship yielded stiffly to the sea a whiff of spray dashed through an open port.

"There!" snapped her ladyship. "I knew we should run into a storm. Yet Captain Ross led us to believe— John, take me to my cabin at once."

From the promenade deck the listless groups watched the rapid advance of the gale. There was mournful speculation upon the Sirdar's chances of reaching Singapore before the next evening.

Iris stood somewhat apart from the other passengers. The wind had freshened, and her hat was tied closely over her ears. She leaned against the taffrail, enjoying the cool breeze after hours of sultry heat. The sky was cloudless yet, but there was a queer tinge of burnished copper in the all pervading sunshine. The sea was utterly blue. The life had gone out of it. It was no longer inviting and translucent.

Long sullen undulations swept noiselessly past the ship. Once after a steady climb up a rolling hill of water the Sirdar quickly pecked at the succeeding valley, and the propeller gave a couple of angry flaps on the surface, while a tremor ran through the stout iron rails on which the girl's arms rested.

The crew were busy too. Squads of Lascars raced about, industriously obedient to the short shrill whistling of Jemadars and Serangs. Boat lashings were tested and tightened, canvas awnings stretched across the deck forward, ventilator cowls twisted to new angles and hatches clamped down over the wooden gratings that covered the holds. Officers, spotless in white linen, stood quietly by and conversed with the watch was changed Iris noted that the "chief" appeared in an old blue suit and carried oilskins over his arm as he climbed to the bridge.

Nature looked disturbed and fitful, and the ship responded to her mood. There was a sense of preparation in the air, of coming events casting foreboding. Chains clanked with a noise the girl never noticed before; the tramp of hurrying men on the hurricane deck overhead seemed heavy and hollow. There was a squeaking of chairs that was abominable when people gathered up books and wraps and staggered ungracefully toward the companionway. Altogether Miss Deane was not wholly pleased with the preliminaries of a typhoon, whatever the realities might be.

Why did that silly old woman allude to her contemplated marriage to Lord Ventnor, retailing the gossip of Hongkong with such malicious emphasis? For an instant Iris tried to shake the railing in comic anger. She hated Lord Ventnor. She did not want to marry him or anybody else just yet. Of course her father had hinted approval of his lordship's obvious intentions. Countess of Ventnor! Yes, it was a nice title. Still she wanted another couple of years of careless freedom. In any event why should Lady Tozer pry and probe?

And finally, why did the steward—oh, poor old Sir John! What would have happened if the boy had slid down his neck? Thoroughly comforted by this gleeful hypothesis, Miss Deane seized a favorable opportunity to dart across the starboard side and see if Captain Ross' "heavy bank of cloud in the northwest" had put in an appearance.

Ha! There it was, black, ominous, gigantic, rolling up over the horizon like some monstrous football. Around it the sky deepened into purple, fringed with a wide belt of brick red. She had never seen such a beginning of a gale. From what she had read in books she imagined that only in great deserts were clouds of dust generated. There could not be dust in the dense pall now rushing with giant strides across the trembling sea. Then what was it? Why was it so dark and menacing? And where was desert of stone and sand to compare with this awful expanse of water? What a small dot was this great ship on the visible surface! But the ocean itself extended away beyond there, reaching out to the infinite. The dot became a mere speck, undistinguishable beneath a celestial microscope such as the gods might confesssed to use.

Iris shivered and aroused herself with a startled laugh.

The lively tattoo of the dinner trumpet failed to fill the saloon. By this time the Sirdar was fighting resolutely against a stiff gale. But the stress of actual combat is better than the eerie sensation of impending danger during the earlier hours. The strong, hearty pulsations of the engines, the regular thrashing of the screw, the steadfast onward plunging of the good ship through racing seas and flying scud, were cheery, confident and inspiriting.

Miss Deane justified her boast that she was an excellent sailor. She smiled delightedly at the ship's surgeon when he caught her eye through the many gaps in the tables. She was close, so he joined her.

"You are a credit to the company—quite a sea king's daughter," he said.

"Doctor, do you talk to all your lady passengers in that way?"

"Alas, no! Too often I can only be truthful when I am dumb."

Iris laughed. "If I remain long on this ship I will certainly have my head turned," she cried. "I receive nothing but compliments from the captain down to—to"—

"The doctor?"

"No. You come a good second on the list."

In very truth she was thinking of the ice carrying steward and his queer start of surprise at the announcement of her rumored engagement. The man interested her. He looked like a broken down gentleman. Her quick eyes traveled around the saloon to discover his whereabouts. She could not see him. The chief steward stood near, balancing himself in apparent defiance of the laws of gravitation, for the ship was now pitching and rolling with a mad zeal. For an instant she began to inquire what had become of the transgressor, but she dismissed the thought at its inception. The matter was too trivial.

With a wild swoop all the plates, glasses and cutlery on the saloon tables crashed to starboard. Were it not for the restraint of the fiddles everything must have been swept to the floor. There were one or two minor accidents. A steward, taken unaware, was thrown headlong on top of his laden tray. Others were compelled to clutch the backs of chairs and cling to pillars. One man involuntarily seized the hair of a lady who devoted an hour before each meal to her coiffure. The Sirdar with a frenzied bound tried to turn a somersault.

"A clange, of course," observed the doctor. "They generally try to avoid it when people are in the saloon, but a typhoon admits of no labored politeness. As its center is now right ahead, we are going on the starboard tack to get behind it."

"I must hurry up and go on deck," said Miss Deane.

"You will not be able to go on deck until the morning."

She turned on him impetuously. "Indeed I will. Captain Ross promised me—that is, I asked him"—

The doctor smiled. She was so charmingly insistent! "It is simply impossible," he said. "The companion doors are bolted. The promenade deck is swept by heavy seas every minute. A boat has been carried away, and several stanchions and stays of cable lateers. For the first time in your life, Miss Deane, you are battened down."

The girl's face must have paled somewhat. He added hastily: "There is no danger, you know, but these precautions are necessary. You would not like to see several tons of water rushing down the saloon stairs; now, would you?"

"Decidedly not." Then, after a pause: "It is not pleasant to be fastened up like a great trunk, doctor. It reminds one of a huge coffin."

"Not a bit. The Sirdar is the safest ship afloat. Even her boats are carried in solid blue suit and carried oilskins over his arm as he climbed to the bridge.

THE ATTRACTIVE GIRL.

Much has been written about "the American girl" and her reasons for being pre-eminently the most attractive girl in the world. In bringing girls mothers can't be too careful to let their daughters develop all their natural charms to the utmost.

The crucial epoch of a woman's life is the change from maidenhood to womanhood. It involves the whole body and manifests itself in the nervous disposition at this time.

Nervous or sick women are afforded the opportunity of a lifetime, for the makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription now offer $500 reward for women who cannot be cured. Backed up by over a third of a century of remarkable and uniform cures, a record such as no other remedy for the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women can ever attained, the proprietors of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription now feel fully warranted in offering to pay $500 in legal money of the United States for any case of Leucorrhea, Female Weakness, Prolapsus, or Falling of the Womb, which they cannot cure. All they ask is a fair and reasonable trial of their means of cure.

"I cannot praise your medicine highly enough," writes Mrs. Jennie Hippenshaver, of Hunterstown, Indiana. "I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and took it steadily for six months. I was not sick at all at each, never vomited once. Took the 'Favorite Prescription' three times a day and when a severe pain took an extra teaspoonful of medicine which checked the pain. I felt pleasant all the time and did not get nervous as I used to. When my baby girl came last August she was healthy. She is now eleven months old. Am thirty-four years old and never got through so easily in my life. Why should women suffer when they can get through so easily? I was able to do quite a washing and ironing which I could not do for eight years before."

As a tonic for women who are nervous, sleepless, worn-out and run-down, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled.

For constipation, use the little pellet-size is Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. Mild, harmless, yet sure. No other pill can compare with them.

"Alas, no! Too often I can only be truthful when I am dumb."

Iris laughed. "If I remain long on this ship I will certainly have my head turned," she cried. "I receive nothing but compliments from the captain down to—to"—

"The doctor?"

"No. You come a good second on the list."

In very truth she was thinking of the ice carrying steward and his queer start of surprise at the announcement of her rumored engagement. The man interested her. He looked like a broken down gentleman. Her quick eyes traveled around the saloon to discover his whereabouts. She could not see him. The chief steward stood near, balancing himself in apparent defiance of the laws of gravitation, for the ship was now pitching and rolling with a mad zeal. For an instant she began to inquire what had become of the transgressor, but she dismissed the thought at its inception. The matter was too trivial.

With a wild swoop all the plates, glasses and cutlery on the saloon tables crashed to starboard. Were it not for the restraint of the fiddles everything must have been swept to the floor. There were one or two minor accidents. A steward, taken unaware, was thrown headlong on top of his laden tray. Others were compelled to clutch the backs of chairs and cling to pillars. One man involuntarily seized the hair of a lady who devoted an hour before each meal to her coiffure. The Sirdar with a frenzied bound tried to turn a somersault.

"A clange, of course," observed the doctor. "They generally try to avoid it when people are in the saloon, but a typhoon admits of no labored politeness. As its center is now right ahead, we are going on the starboard tack to get behind it."

"I must hurry up and go on deck," said Miss Deane.

"You will not be able to go on deck until the morning."

She turned on him impetuously. "Indeed I will. Captain Ross promised me—that is, I asked him"—

The doctor smiled. She was so charmingly insistent! "It is simply impossible," he said. "The companion doors are bolted. The promenade deck is swept by heavy seas every minute. A boat has been carried away, and several stanchions and stays of cable lateers. For the first time in your life, Miss Deane, you are battened down."

The girl's face must have paled somewhat. He added hastily: "There is no danger, you know, but these precautions are necessary. You would not like to see several tons of water rushing down the saloon stairs; now, would you?"

"Decidedly not." Then, after a pause: "It is not pleasant to be fastened up like a great trunk, doctor. It reminds one of a huge coffin."

"Not a bit. The Sirdar is the safest ship afloat. Even her boats are carried in solid blue suit and carried oilskins over his arm as he climbed to the bridge.

Nature looked disturbed and fitful, and the ship responded to her mood. There was a sense of preparation in the air, of coming events casting foreboding. Chains clanked with a noise the girl never noticed before; the tramp of hurrying men on the hurricane deck overhead seemed heavy and hollow. There was a squeaking of chairs that was abominable when people gathered up books and wraps and staggered ungracefully toward the companionway. Altogether Miss Deane was not wholly pleased with the preliminaries of a typhoon, whatever the realities might be.

Why did that silly old woman allude to her contemplated marriage to Lord Ventnor, retailing the gossip of Hongkong with such malicious emphasis? For an instant Iris tried to shake the railing in comic anger. She hated Lord Ventnor. She did not want to marry him or anybody else just yet. Of course her father had hinted approval of his lordship's obvious intentions. Countess of Ventnor! Yes, it was a nice title. Still she wanted another couple of years of careless freedom. In any event why should Lady Tozer pry and probe?

And finally, why did the steward—oh, poor old Sir John! What would have happened if the boy had slid down his neck? Thoroughly comforted by this gleeful hypothesis, Miss Deane seized a favorable opportunity to dart across the starboard side and see if Captain Ross' "heavy bank of cloud in the northwest" had put in an appearance.

Ha! There it was, black, ominous, gigantic, rolling up over the horizon like some monstrous football. Around it the sky deepened into purple, fringed with a wide belt of brick red. She had never seen such a beginning of a gale. From what she had read in books she imagined that only in great deserts were clouds of dust generated. There could not be dust in the dense pall now rushing with giant strides across the trembling sea. Then what was it? Why was it so dark and menacing? And where was desert of stone and sand to compare with this awful expanse of water? What a small dot was this great ship on the visible surface! But the ocean itself extended away beyond there, reaching out to the infinite. The dot became a mere speck, undistinguishable beneath a celestial microscope such as the gods might confesssed to use.

Iris shivered and aroused herself with a startled laugh.

The lively tattoo of the dinner trumpet failed to fill the saloon. By this time the Sirdar was fighting resolutely against a stiff gale. But the stress of actual combat is better than the eerie sensation of impending danger during the earlier hours. The strong, hearty pulsations of the engines, the regular thrashing of the screw, the steadfast onward plunging of the good ship through racing seas and flying scud, were cheery, confident and inspiriting.

Miss Deane justified her boast that she was an excellent sailor. She smiled delightedly at the ship's surgeon when he caught her eye through the many gaps in the tables. She was close, so he joined her.

"You are a credit to the company—quite a sea king's daughter," he said.

"I have sent for some refreshments. Let us have another look before we tackle them."

The two officers passed out into the hurricane. Instantly the wind endeavored to tear the chart-house off the deck. They looked aloft and ahead. The officer on duty saw them and nodded silent comprehension. It was useless to attempt to speak. The weather was perceptibly clearer.

Then all three peered ahead again. They stood, pressing against the wind, seeking to penetrate the murkiness in front. Suddenly they were galvanized into strenuous activity.

A wild howl came from the lookout forward. The eyes of the three men glared at a huge dismasted Chinese junk wallowing helplessly in the trough of the sea dead under the bows.

The captain sprang to the chart house and signaled in fierce pantomime that the wheel should be put hard over.

The officer in charge of the bridge pressed the telegraph lever to "stop" and "full speed astern," while with his disengaged hand he pulled hard at the siren cord, and a raucous warning sent stewards flying through the ship to close collision bulkhead doors. The "chief" darted to the port rail, for the Sirdar's instant response to the helm seemed to clear her nose from the flank as if by magic.

It all happened so quickly that while the hoarse signal was still vibrating through the ship the junk swept past her quarter. The chief officer, joined now by the commander, looked down into the wretched craft. They could see her crew lashed in a bunch around the captain on her elevated poop. She was laden with timber. Although waterlogged, she could not sink if she held together.

A great wave sucked her away from the steamer and then hurled her back with irresistible force. The Sirdar was just completing her turning movement, and she heeled over, yielding to the mighty power of the gale. For an appreciable instant her engines stopped. The mass of water that swayed the junk like a cork lifted the great ship high by the stern. The propeller raced with a roar, for the third officer had corrected his signal to "full speed ahead" again, and the cumbrous Chinese vessel struck the Sirdar a terrible blow in the counter, smashing off the screw close to the thrust block and wrenching the rudder from its bearings.

Then there was a swift race by the engines before the engineers could shut off steam. The junk vanished into the wilderness of noise and tumbling seas beyond, and the fine steamer of a few seconds ago, replete with magnificent energy, struggled like a wounded leviathan in the grasp of a vengeful foe.

She swung around as if in wrath to pursue the puny assailant which had dealt her this mortal stroke. No longer could she face the storm with unbroken resistance, she now drifted aimlessly before wind and wave. She was merely a larger plaything tossed about by titanic gambols. The great vessel lay asunder by the collision. Her planks and cargo littered the waves, were even tossed in derision on to the decks of the Sirdar. Of what avail was strong timber or bolted iron against the spleen of the unchained and formless monster who loudly proclaimed his triumph by the great steamship drifted on through chaos. The typhoon had broken the lance.

Then men, skilfully directed, wrought hard to avert further disaster. After the first moment of stupor gallant British sailors flashed life and limb to bring the vessel under control.

By their calm courage they shamed the paralyzed Lascars into activity. A sail was rigged on the foremast and a sea anchor hastily constructed as soon as it was discovered that the helm was useless. Rockets flared up into the sky at regular intervals in the faint hope that should they attract the attention of another vessel she would follow the disabled Sirdar and render help when the weather moderated.

When the captain ascertained that no water was being shipped, the damage being wholly external, the collision doors were opened and the passengers admitted to the saloon, a brilliant palace, indifferent to the wreck and ruin without.

Captain Ross himself came down and addressed a few comforting words to the ladies and pulled reassuring faces. He told them exactly what had happened.

The hours passed in tedious misery after Captain Ross' visit. Every one was eager to get a glimpse of the unknown terrors without from the deck. This was out of the question, so people sat around the tables to listen eagerly to Experience and his wise saws on drifting ships and their prospects.

Some cautious persons visited their cabins to secure valuables in case of further disaster. A few hardy spirits returned to bed.

Meanwhile in the chart house the captain and chief officer were gravely pricking over an open chart and discussing a fresh risk that loomed ominously before them. The ship was a long way out of her usual course when the accident happened. She was drifting now, they estimated, eleven knots an hour, with wind, sea and current all forcing her in the same direction, drifting into one of the most dangerous places in the known world, the south China sea, with its numerous islands and isolated rocks and the great island of Borneo stretching right across the path of the cyclone.

All that could be done to be done save to make a few unobtrusive preparations and trust to idle chance. To attempt to anchor and ride out the gale in their present position was out of the question.

Two, 3, 4 o'clock came and went. Another half hour would witness the dawn and a further clearing of the weather. The barometer was rapidly rising. The center of the cyclone had swept far ahead. There was only left the aftermath of fiery seas and furious but steadier wind.

Captain Ross entered the chart house for the twentieth time.

He had aged many years in appearance. The smiling, confident, debonair officer was changed into a stricken, mournful man. He had stirred with his ship. The Sirdar and her master could hardly be recognized, so cruel were the blows they had received.

"It is impossible to see a yard ahead," he confided to his second in command. "I have never been so anxious before in my life. Thank God, the night is drawing to a close. Perhaps when day breaks"—

His last words contained a prayer and a hope. Even as he spoke the ship seemed to lift herself bodily with an unusual effort for a vessel moving before the wind.

The next instant there was a horrible grinding crash forward. Each person who did not chance to be holding fast to an upright was thrown violently down. The deck was tilted to a dangerous angle and remained there, while the heavy buffeting of the sea, now raging afresh at this unlooked for resistance, drowned the despairing yells raised by the Lascars on duty.

The Sirdar had completed her last voyage. She was now a battered wreck on a barrier reef. She hung thus for one heartbreaking second. Then another wave, riding triumphantly through its fellows, caught the great steamer in its tremendous grasp, carried her onward for half her length and smashed her down on the rocks. Her back was broken. She parted in two halves. Both sections turned completely over in the utter wantonness of destruction, and everything—masts, funnels, boats, hull, with every living soul on board—was at once engulfed in a maelstrom of rushing water and far flung spray.

CHAPTER II.

WHEN the Sirdar parted amidships the floor of the saloon heaved up in the center with a mighty crash of rending woodwork and iron. Men and women, too stupefied to sob out a prayer, were pitched headlong into chaos. Iris, torn from the terrified grasp of her maid, fell through a corridor and would have gone down with the ship had not a saloon, clinging to a companion ladder, caught her as she whirled along the steep slope of the deck.

He did not know what had happened. With the instinct of self preservation he seized the nearest support when the vessel struck. It was the mere impulse of a moment that caused him to stretch out his left arm and clasp the girl's waist as she shot past. By idle chance they were on the port side, and the ship, after pausing for one awful second, fell over to starboard.

The man was not prepared for this second gyration. Even as the stairway canted he lost his balance; they were both thrown violently through the open hatchway and swept off into the boiling surf. Under such conditions thought itself was impossible. A series of impressions, a number of fantastic pictures, were received by the benumbed faculties and afterward painfully sorted out by the memory. Fear, anguish, amazement—none of these could exist. All he knew was that the lifeless form of a woman—for Iris had happily fainted—must be held until death itself wrenched her from him. Then there came the headlong plunge into the swirling sea, followed by an indefinite period of gasping oblivion. Something that felt like a mighty rock rose up beneath his feet. He was driven clear out of the water and seemed to recognise a familiar object rising right and left of him. It was the pinnacle pillar, screwed to a portion of the deck which came away from the chart house, and was rent from its upper framework by contact with the reef. He seized this unlooked for support with his disengaged hand.

A uniformed figure was thought it was the captain—stretched out an unavailing arm to clasp the queer raft which supported the sailor and the girl, but a heavy wave tore under the platform with devilish energy and turned it completely over, hurling the man with his inanimate burden into the depths. He rose, fighting madly for his life. Now surely he was doomed. But again, as if human existence depended on naught more serious than the spinning of a coin, his knees rested on the same few stanch timbers, now the ceiling of the music room, and he was given a brief respite. His greatest difficulty was to get his breath, so dense was the spray through which

Napanee's Greatest ...Store.

THE Robinson Co.

This store got you to liking it by being a good store at first and gradually growing into a better and better store. It started by selling goods at fair prices and it sold them so earnestly and persistently at fair prices that it has won your approval. We hadn't fooled you; and we wouldn't knowingly. We are anxious to make any wrong right.

Bargains in every department of the store, that is the plain English of it, and every bargain is genuine, not an exaggeration has been permitted.

A CHANCE TO GET A

Rich-High Grade Carpet

AT A CUT PRICE.

If you can't come write or wire to us on Saturday, May 13th, and say that you saw the advertisement in The Napanee Beaver, we will give you the best English Wilton Carpet in the house at $1.25 a yard. These Wilton Carpets that we propose letting you have at that price are rich in design and color combination, thick as a board, with a pile so fine and heavy that you fairly sink in them. The regular city price for similar quality is $1.65 to $1.75 a yard. Being very heavy, Body and Border to match, they make beautiful rugs. This same advertisement appears in three papers, and we take this way to test the value of papers' circulation. Act promptly if you wish to share in the bargain. Enough for the largest rooms.

Sale of Dress Goods

THURSDAY, MAY 18th,

25 Cents a Yard.

About 1,000 yards of plain Mohairs, Brilliantines, Lustres, Cheviots, Serges, Checks, Plaids, Grenadines, worth in usual way 40c to 60c a yard, will be placed on sale Thursday next, May 18th, at 10 o'clock a.m. Sale price 25c a yard.

We will show them in our window before sale. None for mail or telephone orders and not an inch will be sold before 10 o'clock. Please do not ask us to vary from this rule.

Silk, Lisle & Lace Gloves

SATURDAY, MAY 13th,

40c and 50c kinds for 25c

Tell you what they are—A maker's samples of all the kinds that he manufactures. Don't confuse these with travellers' samples that have been out on road and sometimes get soiled These are perfectly fresh and in as good condition as when they left the mill in Germany. There are about 200 pairs and probably enough to supply demand for all day and evening.

Women's Rain Coats.

To term these garments "rain coats" and then stop there in their implied usefulness and stylishness is to do great injustice to very smart styles in full length protective coats. Their use is by no means limited to stormy days. They are an effective street wrap, they are an ideal garment for travelling; and of course being of water proofed materials they are doubly protective from inclemencies of the weather. Besides our regular stock at regular prices we have a lot of sample coats showing the newest styles at one-fourth off.

Japanese and China Mattings.

There is as much difference in the fibre used for matting as in the yarn used in cloth. You never buy the cheap stuff in cloth, but you do when you buy the tip. But you have learned to your sorrow that some mattings do not give good service. To buy mattings at a careless store is to almost throw your money away. Buying matting is no experiment with us. Depend upon it we get the best for you there is going.

Buster Brown Suits and Buster Brown Bow Ties.

For the little chaps, 3 to 6 years of age, there is nothing newer, nothing neater, and nothing that you can put on him that will give you more pride and pleasure than one of our "Buster Brown" or "Little Jap" suits and ties. They range in price from 3.75 to 5.00 for the suit including collar and tie. We have the Buster Brown Collars and the Buster Brown Bow Ties in stock separate from the suits.

Men's Top Shirts.

We have searched the markets to secure the best made and best quality of shirts for our customers. In Dress Shirts, both in colored and white, we lead the procession with the "Crescent" brand, the best fitting shirt on the market. In working shirts at 50c, 75c and 1.00, all we ask is a comparison. Our guarantee goes with them.

Three Quarter Length Black Silk Coats are Very Stylish.

We are showing some very new models that are strikingly stylish. Three-quarter length, fluted at shoulder to give broad effect, large sleeves. We mention two prices, $12.50 and $17.50, that are particularly good value.

Charming Hats at $5.

There is a knack that closely resembles art—and surrounding ourselves with people of knack we have developed a standard of Millinery excellence that makes our Hats the standard of excellence. Look at any one of our hats at $5. They look $10 as one woman put it. At $6, $8, $10 there are hats just as well worth the price asked. There is a reason for every dollar on the ticket. By frequent visits our milliners are keeping up with your demands and we are doing a great millinery business.

Lace and Embroidered Hosiery for Women.

Lace and Embroidered Stockings are coming back to favor with a bound. Grenadine Laces just like a mesh and pretty designed affairs with here and there an embroidered sprig. There has been little weather for wearing them here yet, but the demand is extremely heavy for them in the American cities now and what goes there is sure to go here when season opens. We are ready for demand now.

Overalls and Smocks A Specialty.

We have an extra large and extra good stock of Men's Working Clothes. We believe our values are ahead of the average by a long way. People tell us so. They tell us we have the best overalls at 50c, 75c and $1 to be found anywhere, and our smocks at the same price are splendid fitters and wearers.

Blues, Blacks, Browns, Moleskins, Butternuts and Knaki.

Be sure and ask to see our "Ross of the Road", "Bully Boy", "Paragon" and "Double Seat and Knee" Overalls.

"NEVER MAN SPAKE LIKE THIS MAN," TRUE OF HIM.

ORATORY OF THE HIGHEST

His Theme, the Salvation of Mankind, Provocative, Even In the Humblest, of Effective Eloquence — Christian Conversation and Example Likewise Has Undelying It the Germs of True Oratory.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year one thousand nine hundred and five, by the Rev. Dyer, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., May 7.—In this sermon the preacher, while appreciating at their true value the higher flights of oratory and the famous triumphs of great speakers, shows how even the humblest may be effective in the eloquence of Christian conversation and example. The text is John vii, 46, "Never man spake like this man."

What is true oratory? Mere conjuration, bewitchery, enchantment, mystitism, mesmerism or animal magnetism, a mere transitory magic spell with which a great public speaker is able to hypnotize an audience for an evening or for a night alone? Is it a few poetic garlands made up of pretty wax flowers, which never grew in a garden, which never caught the incense laden breath of the soil, which cannot stand the light of the sun and which, like the moon flowers, melt away as soon as the morning sun has touched them with the fingers of fire? Is it mere galvanic shock which can make a human corpse tremble for a little while and even lift a hand or shake a head and yet a current which can never bring the dead body back to life? Is it a mere magnetic needle which will momentarily move an iron heart, as many magnetic needles can make nails and screws stand upon their heads for a few seconds and then fall back cold, motionless screws and nails as soon as their lifting touch is taken away? Oh, no; true oratory is more than that.

True oratory is one of the most potent if not the most potent gift with which God has endowed man. It is mighty for good or mighty for evil. It is a social factor which creates, or it molds and upbuilds or it is a social factor which undermines and destroys and wrecks. It is impossible for me to believe in the doctrine of the transmigration of souls, then I would believe in the doctrine of reference to oratory. With mere words a skillful orator can have his spirit incarnated in the minds and the hearts of his hearers. With mere words not even God himself can make a statement that I would believe to be false, and I do not think, but to do as he would have them do and as he himself wants to do.

The gift of true oratory is second in power to no other human gift. An overstatement is this? I think not. Andrew Fletcher, the great English dramatist and poet, once said, "All he believe if a man were permitted to make all the ballads of a country he need not care who made the laws." A true orator has all the power of the sweet singer of the fields. He has more than that. He has the power which has the power of personal touch. He has the influence of the flashing eye, of the quivering lip, of the power which comes from a soul on fire, which reaches forth and out and by burning influence, position before him or consumes them as in a mighty conflagration. If the open be mightier than the sword, then the orator's scepter is greater than that of the warrior's or the writer's. The Demosthenian tongue compelled men's ears to hear what his pen could not compel his author's eyes to read. Great is the eloquent tongue of silver speech!

Great is the power of oratory and orators! But if it is great in the present age how much greater must it have been in the times of the ancients! Then the modern printing press had not yet been born, and the human mind could only appeal to the human mind through the influence of the human tongue. But, though the generations preceding Christ and the first or some of the greatest orators who ever lived, though Pericles and Lysias and Lycurgus and Aeschines had won their marvelous triumphs in old Athens, though the mighty Roman orators had lived and, like Marcus Tullius Cicero, had hurled their verbal thunderbolts, yet when Jesus began to speak, every one of his auditors intuitively felt that a new power of oratory had been born. The words of my text prove it. With one accord Christ's hearers said, "Never man spake like this man."

Why is gospel oratory the sublimest form of oratory? Because the divine speech offer to man the greatest opportunities for the development of the true and noble orator's soul? The true gospel orator's message is the mightiest of all messages. It furnishes the speaker with the mightiest of all themes. It cradles its thoughts, not like Moses upon the waters of a river Nile, but by the shores of the eternal fountains of the eternities. As a charioteer it harnesses to its verbal chariots characters which have eyes all seeing, ears all hearing, hoofs so swift that their speed is swift as thought. It deals with infinitesimals only as they are essential parts of great infinites. It halts not at the grave. It makes immortals, as a Eugene Sue's Wandering Jew, move on and on and on and never die. Its trumpet is the voice of the archangel. God, heaven, immortality, resurrection, ascension, heaven, hell, eternity, redemption, salvation, eternal condemnation, eternal suffering, are its mighty subjects. Like the mountains of the eternity deep, its voice comes reverberating down the halls of the past ages. Like the echoes which are answering and answering hillside up among the Alpine crags, its hopes go echoing down the centuries upon centuries to prophesy unto men on millenniums to come. Its themes are the mightiest of all themes. No subject in all the realm of thought is as great as that which occupies the public speaker in gospel oratory.

If its themes were not the greatest of all themes, then my caption to-day could not be written. You must have a great theme in order to produce true oratory." All the students of oratory recognize this law. Why is Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg address to be ranked among the greatest orations of the ages? Was he playing a few poetic garlands upon the grave of the dead? No. He was making a national plea for forgiveness and love. Was Patrick John Knox's eloquence set all Scotland afire? Why did Martin Luther's invectives hurled against the papal divine love? Why did Savonarola arouse Italy until its inhabitants were tumultuous in agony and shame? Why did Cicero's arraignment of Catiline and the philippics that Demosthenes hurled against the King of Macedon and his armies and make men enthusiastic in battle? Were these orators declaiming for selfish political purposes, merely trying to destroy rivals who were obstructing their path? No. They were attacking lust and licentiousness and tyranny and crime of all sorts. It was their mighty themes that made their eloquence effective. You must have a great theme to have a great oration.

This conference is proof of this. Men can you find greater themes for true eloquence than in gospel oratory? Is there a sounding line which can reach to the bottom of a deeper sea? Is there any power on earth which can surely transform wrong to right, make the strong care for the weak, make Typhons of human lusts turn to the rocks of prostrate Helplessness, than the power of Jesus? Where can you find an orator's weapons as for the fear of God, for the cure of sin save in the crucifixion and the resurrection and the atonement and the eternities? The themes of gospel oratory are not only wide enough and great enough to put a man in touch with God and with heaven, but they are so great that if they once accept them and understand them they will give us perfect homes, perfect neighbors, perfect nations and a perfect world. Why, we can say more that if we only practice them "love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," shall everywhere be supreme in the human heart. Could we have a greater cure for all the evils that threaten to come than are offered in the themes of gospel oratory?

Are you right might and to redress the wrongs of a limited class have been the mighty themes which have produced orations during the past years. Watch the lightnings of invective that have leaped out of the eyes of the orators during the dark days of the abolition movement. Amid that mighty hurricane of oratory we can see William Lloyd Garrison, with clinched fists, defying the Boston mobs. We can hear his biting words, amid a perfect pandemonium of wrath, crying: "You will hear me! In spite of yourselves you will hear me!" You can see Wendell Phillips standing amid a shower of tempests watching the lightning orators to drive into the hearts of his hearers another sentence to prove to them why the black men should have all the rights hear glorious John Bright pleading for the rights of the black men from the other side of the sea. Was the appeal against the black men offered such a mighty theme for the eloquent tongue shall not modern themes be equally as white slave offer just as great a theme for gospel eloquence? Yes, gospel orators have the mightiest of themes for eloquent speech! The gospel of Christ was the right all were to. It will emancipate a sinner from all time. It would make all men conquerors in this world and in the world to come. Man, would you be truly eloquent? Then by the power of the Holy Spirit have your tongue touched for the universal acceptance of the gospel in impassioned oratory.

Gospel oratory gives the sublimest of all themes. It does more than that. It offers the greatest of all authorities by which those themes are discussed. It comes to man and places in his hand the Bible and says: "Man, here is the word of God. These are not my statements. These are promises made by our divine Father. If you will accept God's word and do as this book directs, your life will be blessed." Now, it is an easy matter to discuss a wrong. It is often very easy for a physician to diagnose a cancer. But the cure—aye, that is the rub! Easy to discuss a moral wrong. Yes. But it is another matter to find a specific solution for that wrong. This the Bible offers. It comes not as a theorist. It comes to the gospel orator's hearers and to Jesus Christ. It comes as one speaking with a divine authority. No men in the world have greater authority than their hearers than those who are backed with the positive authority of the Bible.

When a man speaks with authority he becomes impressive in his demands. Why is Helen Hunt Jackson pleaded for justice to the American Indian with the idea that the law of the land would uphold her in her plea? She pleaded not pleading for the red man as a utopian, a theorist or a social dreamer. She was pleading for the man backed by the bar of American law. When she represented poor Alessando as being driven from farm to farm she was not picturing a scoundrel, but a man defrauded of American rights. When she finally describes this poor, benevolent Indian as shot down by a drunken white loafer and then pictures that drunken loafer as being allowed to go free, she was not appealing to human prejudices for favoritism toward the red man. She was saying: "What is the law? What is the American law?

The law of America upholds me in my claims."

As Helen Hunt Jackson pleaded for the rights of the Indian under the American law the Christian orator pleads for the emancipation of man from sin under the law of the Bible. He does not say, "I hope this may be." He does say: "I know this can be and shall be through the blood of Jesus Christ. The divine statutes declare it." When a gospel orator stands upon the promises of God found in the Bible he speaks with certainty; he speaks with absolute conviction; above all, he speaks as no other advocate unsupported can speak. No other man in pleading for simple justice has such emphatic divine authority behind him as is found in the word of God when pleading for repentance and righteousness.

The gospel orator is mighty when he pleads for one whom he would save from eternal death. He naturally has all the fire, all the enthusiasm, all the repent up passion of a lawyer pleading at the bar of justice trying to save the life of a client who is being tried for murder in the first degree. Aye, he has more than that. He has all the intense earnestness that was felt by Wendell Phillips in 1846 when he pleaded for the life of William Freeman, an idiotic black pauper who had killed the entire Van Nest family of Auburn, N. Y. It was during the agitation of the abolitionist movement. The whole north of the north as well as the south were against him. His own friends at the bar were against him. Yet there was Hiram H. Seward pleaded and kept pleading. When at last his client was hung by the neck until he was dead by postmortem examination it was found out that William Freeman was in truth an idot and irresponsible for the crime which he had committed and that William H. Seward, the young attorney, was right in his defence of him.

But the Christian orator has a higher and even a greater inspiration than the saving of sinful men and women from eternal death. He stands in a unique position. He is not only pleading for the salvation of men, but also for what is pleasing to God. And of all inspirations to "sublimest oratory" there is no inspiration like unto that.

The Christian orator, the advocate of the divine will and pleasure: Let me illustrate my meaning by a very familiar picture. You are not the only son of your mother. She has another boy, younger than you. But, whereas you are in one sense the good boy, he has been the bad. He drinks; he swears; he lies; he does everything he ought not to do. Again and again your mother reasons with him, pleads with him or cares to his evasion. Your father left her a little money. She has spent it all trying to save him. One night he came home from a drunken spree. And when she spoke to him it made him mad. In a rage he knocked her down and kicked her in the breast. As a result of that kick a cancer has formed. She is going to die. You are heartsick. "Oh, mother, mother!" you say. "If I could only make you well and happy again!" You plead by her bedside she runs her fingers through your hair just as she did when you were a boy and whispers: "Harry, you can make me happy. Will you? Then I want you to go after your brother Joe and get him to come home sober." Do you not? With a cry you leap to your feet. You shake the dying woman's hand off and exclaim: "I will go for that drunken brute, whose cruel heel has given you your death wound? Never, mother, never! I will see him in Hades first, or in the infernal regions—first." Then your mother begins to plead. She says: "Harry, you have sufficient to account of Joe, but have not I suffered? Have not I given my life for him? And, oh, Harry, I cannot die happy unless we save your brother Joe." Once more you rise. Once more you vow that you will save your brother Joe for his own sake. Now there comes a greater inspiration than either life. You want to save him because you can make your mother happy, who is dying on account of Joe's sin. Is not this the figure of God's love? The Christian orator is inspired not to save one sinful man from eternal death for himself. Oh, the mighty inspiration which makes a gospel orator not only plead to save sinners for themselves, but to save men for the sake of the divine Father's forgiving love.

Thus, while the sublime oratory of the gospel speaker may be awakened by many different inspirations, the mightiest factor is due to the power of the Holy Spirit himself. When Jesus Christ stood before the Jewish people to speak, his hearers intuitively felt that there was a strange, superhuman and a divine power about him. Ever since the true Christian orator arises to speak, he feels that strange influence is there. The same divine influence that Christ had over an audience you and I may have in degree if we will only let the Holy Spirit work in us and through us, for Christ distinctly says that the very things he did we may do if we will only let the Holy Spirit live in us.

The other day I was talking to an old man who used to be a student of the great Dr. Eliphalet Nott of Union college. One day in the oratorial class a student arose to speak. He began to let out his voice in rotund style. He dramatically lifted his arms and twitched his eyebrows when Dr. Nott stopped him and said: "My son, that is not oratory. If you have something to say, just tell it to us as you would if there were only three of us alone in a room. Public speaking is only public conversation on a large scale." Don't you grasp the truth? By the law of Christian oratory you may never be called upon to address a large audience at once, but you can address two or three hearers for Christ at the dinner table. You can address a neighbor for Christ in the street or going down to business. You can address Christ in the prayer meeting and in the Sunday school. You can become an exponent of the sublimest oratory of this world by simply living by which the Holy Spirit works in you and through you in conversation. Will you consecrate an eloquent tongue to the divine Master? If you have anything to say for Christ, will you say it? Will you speak it for Christ by the power of the Holy Spirit working in you and through you in sublime gospel oratory?

Boiling Point of Water.

Water boils at different temperatures, according to the elevation above the sea level. Thus, water boils practically at 212 degrees Fahrenheit; in Munich, Germany, as 209 1-2 degrees and in City of Mexico at 202 degrees, and in the Himalayas, at an elevation of eighteen thousand feet above the level of the sea, at 187 degrees. These differences are caused by the varying pressure of the atmosphere at these points. In London the pressure of the air has to be overcome. In Mexico, seven thousand feet above, and in what is known as the Himalayas, about three thousand feet less of atmosphere to be resisted; consequently less heat is required and boiling takes place at a lower temperature.

Smallest Coin.

The smallest coin now current in Europe, and the one having the least value, is the "copper" of Servia. Before it, according to the decimal monetary system, current in all countries belonging to the Latin Union, also for what is pleasing to God. And of all inspirations to "sublimest oratory" there is no inspiration like unto that.

The Christian orator, the advocate of the divine will and pleasure: Let me illustrate my meaning by a very familiar picture. You are not the only son of your mother. She has another boy, younger than you. But, whereas you are in one sense the good boy, he has been the bad. He drinks; he swears; he lies; he does everything he ought not to do. ARE YOUR KIDNEYS SICK?

Let your morning urine stand for 24 hours in a glass or vessel, and then if it is milky or cloudy, or contains a reddish brick-dust sediment, or if particles or germs float about in it, your kidneys are diseased. If the kidneys are well they filter just so much blood, but if they are sick or weak from any cause, they leave the poison in the blood, and this poison affects the entire system.

It is natural to pass urine three times a day, but many who regard themselves as healthy are obliged to pass water six to ten times daily, and are obliged to get up frequently during the night. They have poor kidneys and bladder and don't know it. Smith's Buchu Lithia Pills cure Rheumatism and all Kidney and Bladder diseases, and make new, rich blood.

We will send you a generous sample post paid Free, together with our large book on the above mentioned diseases. Address, W. F. Smith Co., 185 St. James Street, Montreal, Canada.

POOR, WATERY BLOOD

The Cause of Pimples and all Disfiguring Eruptions—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the Only Cure.

Poor, watery blood—pale blood—is the cause of every pale complexion. Bad blood—blood filled with poisonous impurities—is the cause of every eruption. Bad blood is responsible for eruptions, and pimples, and for scrofula, burning, itching, eczema. These troubles can only be cured through the blood, and the only medicine that actually makes new blood—rich, pure health-giving blood—is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The new blood which these pills make reaches every organ and part of the body. It clears the complexion, banishes pimples, and eruptions, and brings health, strength and happiness. Miss Lizzie Lobsanger, Carlsruhe, Ont., says: "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the best medicine I know of for cleaning the blood of impurities. My blood was in a bad condition, and as a result I was not only weak and run down, but was troubled with pimples and eruptions. I tried several medicines, but they did not help me. Then I was advised to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and these soon relieved me of all my troubles. I can recommend the pills to anyone suffering from bad blood."

Bad blood is the cause of nearly every disease that afflicts humanity. It is because Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make new, rich red blood that they cure such troubles as anaemia, heart palpitation, headaches and backaches, rheumatism, neuralgia, indigestion, kidney and liver troubles, and ailments of girlhood and womanhood. But you must get the genuine Pink Pills, with the full name, "Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around each box. Sold by druggists, or sent by mail or sent post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

They are Not Violent in action. Some persons, when they wish to cleanse the stomach, resort to Epsom salts and other purgative salts. These act speedily in their action, but serve no permanent good. They are productive of incipient chills, and if persisted in they injure the stomach. Nor do they act upon the intestines in a beneficial way. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets serve all purposes in this respect, and have no superior.

TAKING TIME TO BE A LADY.

"It is a truism that it takes time to be a lady," is the up in meaning of Goodlove's wise observations concerning the rush of a business woman's life in the Woman's Magazine for June, and characteristically she meets the situation, which spells either discouraging to her audience of business women, square in the face. "Very well, then," she says, "find the time and take it. I have no sympathy with the notion that the woman who is clever enough to support herself is not clever enough to make opportunity for the time really to belong to her. She who, in a daily expanding knowledge, sees new possibilities of refinement and culture must pursue such valiantly." This writer is an excellent inspirer, yet most readers, I fancy, will pass here with a more or less definite feeling of demur as they think with regret of the talents that deserve the fields of knowledge viewed only afar off, yes, even the time which others were filling with graceful avocations, even of no demands of stern duty or necessity, which would be unable to claim "sticking to one's job" hinders refinement; and if refinement calls for discipline, why, then, to meet old conventional standards, a revised "curriculum for a gentle-woman" has to be compiled to meet the needs of "the strenuous life."

RAFFLED A HUSBAND.

Kansas City Girl Won One and Claimed Him.

At Kansas City, under circumstances that would have daunted most maidens, Miss Katherine Knoche, a stenographer, a girl of eighteen, walked bravely forward through a dense crowd and claimed as her husband a man she had been in a "drawing" at an entertainment given by the Westpoint Protestant Home for Girls. The "prize" is R. L. Arnett. The society has advertised as a feature of the entertainment that a husband would be offered as the "capital prize" in a drawing and the ball was packed.

Not many in the hall believed the drawing would take place, or at least if it did there would be some sort of a "fake" about it. The programme commenced at 10 o'clock, after an announcement had been made that the drawing would take place last.

At 11:30 o'clock the crowd began to grow restless and at 11:30 amid a profound hustle the chairman announced that the drawing would take place immediately.

There was no response when the first two numbers were announced, cries of "Speech! Speech!" from the Knoche stepped forward. She was presented to the "prize" and the crowd cheered unrestrainedly.

At length order was restored, and the president of the lodge said to the bride:

"Do you want to be married here now?"

Arnett pulled himself together by an effort, braced himself against a convenient chair, and looked up long enough to say:

"It's up to her. Whatever she says goes, I'm game."

Then he discovered some new charm about his feet. The girl decided to wait and talk it over.

Miss Knoche said: "I guess we'll be married, I hated to come through the crowd and don't regret it. I was previously acquainted with Mr. Arnett.

"We belong to the same lodge, and he has taken me home two or three times."

The lodge agreed to give the couple $250 with which to furnish a home and to rent a house for them, and the bride-to-be left for home in advance. Arnett carries $3,000 insurance on his life. It was said that Miss Knoche has been worrying the intentions of Joseph Arnett, a brother of the "prize," and that recently they quarreled. It is said that after learning that if she drew the lucky number she would claim the "prize." The society management will refer a young woman as a "prize" in another drawing to be held soon.

MORE DEADLY THAN FAMINE.

Neglected catarrh sooner or later causes consumption which destroys more human beings than famine and war combined. The way to Catarrhozone cures catarrh is very obvious—plain; it first kills the germs that cause the irritation; then by soothing away the congestion and inflammation it cures the discharges, hawking and dropping in the throat. "I suffered so continually from nasal catarrh," writes Ernest R. Daklin of Rosemont, "that I scarcely knew what it was to be free from headache and pain over the eyes. Catarrhozone relieved me at once and made a thorough cure." Get Catarrhozone—"Catarrhozone"—try it for your next cold.

Mr. C. B. Wainwright of Lemon City, Fla., has written the manufacturers that much better results are obtained from the use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in cases of pains in the stomach, colic and cholera morbus by taking it in water as hot as can be drank. That when taken in this way the effect is double and rapidly. "It never fails to get at the right spot instantly," he says. For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store.

HOPE FOR EVERYBODY.

There Seems to be no Case so Bad That Anti-Pill Cannot Cure It. A Strong Claim, but well Supported.

Just recently a physician in Lincoln, Nebraska, has made a discovery which is exciting the interest and wonder of the entire medical profession all over the world.

Dr. Leonhardt began on the theory that the poisons sent through the system by the rotting and fermenting of undigested foods were the prime cause of nearly every disease.

He labored on the theory, if possible, a remedy that would stimulate and heal the mucous membrane lining of the stomach and bowels, till, and their normal, healthy action, perfect digestion would be restored.

He succeeded, and his prescription he called Anti-Pill. The proof that his work was well done is found in the long list of remarkable cures made by Anti-Pill.

Anti-Pill is 50c a bottle, at all Druggists, or The Wilson-Pyle Co., Limited, Niagara Falls, Ont. Sole Agents for Canada. 112

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

Old Lady—Little boy, did you see anything of a white cat?

Little Boy—Yes; she fell into a barrel of black paint down the street, but I had her all right.

Old Lady—Oh, you good little boy! What did you do?

Little Boy—I threwed her into a barrel of whitewash.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhœa, and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking, and green fruit, is sure to bring on the attack. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops are taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

"Positively, madam," quoth the dealer, "I admit that article myself."

"It looks rather soiled" said the lady timidly, reading the label of straw background when it tumbled off the tree."

"I'm well to know a good thing," said Mrs. Surface to Mrs. Knowwell, as they met in the street. "Why, where have you been for a weak time past?" "Just down to the store for a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil," said Mrs. Surface, who hates puns, walked on. But she remembered, and when she returned a weak back there was another customer for Eclectric Oil.

And she did. She marked it down from 28 to 22.

Something More Than a Purgative. To purge is the only effect of many pills now on the market. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are more than a purgative. They strengthen the stomach, increase the gills weaken it. They cleanse the blood by regulating the liver and kidneys, and they stimulate where other pill compounds depress. Nothing is more beneficial than they are for merely purgative powers, enters into their composition.

"Is it true," asked Dr. Quiz, "that your husband ordered Dr. Smoother out of the house?"

"Yes. Poor Jack had been carrying the baby all night and every night for a week, and was run down to a thread. I called the doctor, and he told John that he must exercise."

SUCCESSFUL CANNING FACTORY.

Rochester, N.Y., May 6th, '05

Dear Beaver,—I enclose clipping from D. and C., taken from LeRoy Republican, which may be of interest your readers as so many are interested in your new canning factory, which encouraged me to use "best wishes" also of an expatriated.

OLD BAY BOY.

Le Roy, May 1st.—The Le Roy Canning Company is preparing for the largest business in its history. The capital stock of the company was recently increased from $25,000 to $50,000 and the output of the concern will be larger this year than ever before. Contracts are now being made with the farmers all through this section for the growing of produce on a larger scale. The establishment of this industry has been a good one for the farmers, as for the people who have been given employment in the factory during the summer as time when other business is usually a little dull.

Last season's business was on a large scale. Over 300 tons of produce was put up by the factory last year, were they to be transported by teams, would require the full time of a team more than 18 miles long, or covering a distance from Le Roy to Brockport, allowing thirty feet for each team, and there would not be enough men, women and children in Le Roy to fill the positions which they were assigned to each team. To put up the quantity of goods sent out last year would require cans which if placed end to end would extend 160 miles, or from Le Roy to Utica. In the season on the cans if pasted together would extend from Le Roy to New York, or a distance of 388 miles. For one man to pack all of the goods put up last year would require twelve years and nine days, provided he worked ten hours a day and packed one can a minute. It is understood that the present year the number of improvements are to be made to the plant in the way of machinery, etc.

Brave Young Girl.

HEROIC ACT OF A FORMER RESIDENT OF NAPANEE.

The following article taken from the Syracuse Herald, deals with an act of heroism performed by Miss Daisy Haskell, of Oneida, N.Y., granddaughter of our esteemed townsman, Mr. Jeremiah Storms. Miss Hask ell lived in Napanee for a number of years with her parents:

Miss Daisy Haskell of Oneida, is as modest as she is brave.

It is safe to say that there are not many young women who, having rushed almost in front of a flying train and dragged a helpless man to a place of safety, would be inclined to make light of the act and to declare that it was nothing worth mentioning. That is exactly what Miss Haskell says, and, what is more, she is sincere in her disclaimer.

"I don't suppose that anything would have happened to him anyway" she asserts. "Or if a girl who was with me instead of myself had been on the side nearest the tracks, she would have done just what I did. Really, there is nothing to make a fuss about."

But Miss Haskell's friends and those who saw the incident which she treats so lightly, say otherwise. They vow that but for the young woman's courage and presence of mind, the mangled remains of the well known man would have strewn the tracks and that by her action she placed her own life in imminent danger.

The occurrence which Miss Haskell takes so lightly and of which she modestly, took place on the evening of Monday, April 17th. Miss Haskell, who is employed as a seamstress at the factory of the National Casket Company, was returning from her work in company with several friends. When they crossed the tracks in front of the station they perceived in close proximity to the first track on which the fast trains come from the East, the figure of a man swaying to and fro.

The girls stood still and watched him, when suddenly the quiet of the scene was broken by the shrill whistle of an advancing train. And there in the distance, coming swiftly nearer and yet more near, came a flying freight train, bearing down upon the man, who unconscious of his danger, was dragging himself almost into the very face of certain death. For a moment the onlookers stood spellbound. Then, with one rush, Miss Haskell cleared the distance which between herself and the drunken man and gained his side. The train was so near that its hot breath fanned the girl's garments. The man, still unaware of the terrible fate rushing down upon him, was swaying from left to right. All at once his foot slipped and he fell almost across the track. Miss Haskell seized him by the arm and with a quick movement brought him to a standing position and held him until the snorting, fiery monster had passed by in its course, leaving him safe and unharmed.

HE SALUTED COURTEOUSLY.

The man was sufficiently sobered by the passing of the train to realize the peril he had escaped. He looked at his rescuer for a moment in a dazed manner, then at the disappearing train, and holding himself erect, though with difficulty, he removed his hat and made a low bow to the girl who had snatched him from such imminent danger. Then he turned and made his way in a northerly direction toward another part of the village. Miss Haskell and her companions watched him out of sight and then resumed their journey homeward. When Miss Haskell arrived at her home, No. 18 Elm street, she told her parents little of the affair in which she had borne such a heroic part that she did not even mention it to her parents. They did not, however, her mother was informed of the occurrence by some of the per son, who had seen it the night before, and when Miss Haskell came to dinner at noon she brought with her a large molasses cookie which had been presented to her by her work mates and upon which was pasted the inscription:

"Reward of Valor for Saving the Life of John Doe."

ENTITLED TO A CARNEGIE MEDAL

Judging from the account of the circumstances given by witnesses there seems to be no doubt that Miss Haskell is entitled to recommendation for the Carnegie medal for valor, the conditions of the award of which provide that the recipient must have at the risk of danger to his or her own life, saved another from injury or death. This brave girl was undoubtedly without any thought of her own peril when she rushed forward to save the helpless drunkard from the fate which he would have been unable to avert from himself, and there is good reason to believe that the heroic deed to which she seems to attach so little importance will procure for her the distinguished honor of being the first woman to gain the reward.

LIFE'S CHANGES.

I had a million dollars once,
And I was happy, too;
I gave much to the needy poor,
Just as the rich should do.

I showered on my loving wife
The things which gold will buy;
I gave to all my relatives
Much wealth, without a sigh.

I travelled in far distant lands,
I did not have to toil;
I set sail every into land,
And some I put in oil.

I was a happy man, indeed!
And joy quite filled my cup;
Until the old alarm clock had
To go and wake me up.

A fly and a flea in a flue
Were imprisoned. Now what could they do?
Said the fly, "Let us flee."
"Let us flee," said the flea.
So they flew through a flaw in the flue.

We Offer $1,000

For a Disease Germ That Liquozone Can't Kill.

On every bottle of Liquozone we offer $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. We do this to assure you that Liquozone does kill germs.

And it is the only way known to kill germs in the body without killing the tissues, too. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Medicine is almost helpless in any germ disease. It is this fact which gives Liquozone its worth to humanity; a worth so great that, after testing the product for two years, through physicians and hospitals, we paid $100,000 for the American rights. And we have spent over one million dollars, in one year, to buy the first bottle and give it free to each sick one who would try it.

Acts Like Oxygen.

Liquozone is not made by compounding drugs, nor is there any alcohol in it. Its virtues are derived solely from gas—largely oxygen gas—by a process requiring immense apparatus and 14 days' time. This process has, for more than 20 years, been the constant subject of scientific and chemical research.

The result is a liquid that does what oxygen does. It is a nerve food and blood food—the most helpful thing in the world to you. Its effects are exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying. Yet it is an absolutely certain germicide. The reason is that germs are vegetables; and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen—is deadly to vegetal matter.

Liquozone goes into the stomach, into the bowels and into the blood, to go wherever the blood goes. No germ can escape it and none can resist it. The results are inevitable, for a germ disease must end when the germs are killed. Then Liquozone, acting as a wonderful tonic, quickly restores a condition of perfect health. Diseases which have resisted medicine for years yield at once to Liquozone, and it cures diseases which medicine never cures. Half the people you meet—wherever you are—can tell you of cures that were made by it.

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone attacks the germs, wherever they are. And when the germs which cause a disease are destroyed, the disease must end, and forever. That is inevitable.

MAY & JUNE

are the Best Months to Make Money Raising Chickens

Chicks hatched then grow more rapidly and require less care than at any time of year. It's the knack of running the business successfully is acquired under the most favorable circumstances.

One good May or June hatching will bring out a brood of chicks that sell about October 1st for enough to pay for an Incubator and another batch can then be started that will get the chicks out in time for the Christmas market. The next batch will be ready for the March and April market, "broilers" commanding the very highest market prices.

A good Incubator is the foundation of real success in poultry raising, bringing the whole matter from guesswork to certainty. We furnish you with a on easy terms. No cash to pay until November, 1905. By that time it should have paid for itself.

Nothing else raised on a farm pays like this, and the beauty of it all is that the women folks or children can easily attend to the very small amount of work there is to be done. Half an hour or so a day is all the time required.

Getting the right Incubator is pretty nearly the whole thing. The Chatham is the safest and surest Incubator made. It does the trick; 100 per cent. hatches every time if the eggs are fertile. Rather than go into details of construction here, we will print a few out of many hundreds of testimonials:

Brighton, Ont., April 15th, 1905.

The Manson Campbell Co.,
Chatham, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I told you when I received my Incubator and Brooder that I would write you after I had used it. I had with my first hatch. When the Incubator arrived I went and got eggs to put in it, and I was anxious to get it started I took all the eggs I could from the city, and as I was not very particular I could not pick them over. There were a few small ones and some cracked, and I got fifty chickens. Having died in the shell, which I think was fully up to the average. I am sorry I did not order the 120 size instead of the 80. I have now fifty-seven chickens and expect fifty more. I wish you could tell me where I could get a good poultry paper, something that would suit a beginner.

Yours truly,
R. H. BARAGER,
Box 784, Brighton, Ont.

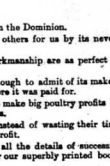
P.S.—I would rather attend to an Incubator than a farm any day, for some accidents to a farm. I am having that if you look after them you will get chicks.

Valens, Ont., April 15th, 1905.

The Manson Campbell Co.,
Chatham, Ont.

Dear Sir,—The Incubator that we purchased from you on the 15th Jan. last is certainly a dandy. Out of a No. 1 Incubator with 83 fertile eggs I got 76 chickens, and they are all strong and healthy. I used 11 gallons of oil. I think there is no better Incubator in the world.

Yours truly,
MRS. JOHN ROBSON,
Valens P.O., Ont.



MANSON CAMPBELL

We have similar letters from every State in the United States, and every Province in the Dominion.

Every Incubator we put out is the best kind of advertising we do, for it sells many others for us by its never-failing results.

The Chatham is built on honor, and its construction and workmanship are as perfect as an experience of fifty years and ample capital can make them.

The Chatham was the first Incubator made that was good enough to admit of its makers taking chances that it would make its cost for the poultryman before it was paid for.

Don't imagine for a moment that it is any longer possible to make big poultry profits by setting hens. As hatchers hens are as out of date as stone hatchets.

If these erratic, uncertain birds are kept busy egg-laying instead of wasting their time setting, the poultryman will pocket a good many extra dollars in profit.

If you want to get full particulars on the subject and learn all the details of successful Incubator hatching and profitable poultry raising send to-day for our superbly printed book, "How to Make Money Out of Chicks." It's FREE.

"RAFFLES" STORIES IN THE MAIL AND EMPIRE.

Mr. E. W. Hornung's stories of "Raffles, The Amateur Cracksman" are universally admitted to be the most fascinating tales of criminal adventure ever written. The character of Raffles, the gentleman burglar and cool-robber, is one new to fiction; the story of his exploits excels in vigor and thrilling interest the work of any other modern writer. The Mail and Empire will begin publication in the Daily on May 13th, and the Weekly edition on May 18th, of Mr. Hornung's new series of "Amateur Cracksman" tales which have never before appeared in periodical form.

The first of these tales, "The Ides of March," introduces Raffles and his faithful companion, "Bunny", in their first and most exciting burglary of the great jewelry store, "House of Gems." The tales will appear every Saturday in The Daily Mail and Empire, as well as in the Weekly edition for the next three months. Orders taken at this office—The Beaver and Weekly Mail for one year, $1.75.

"BABES IN TOYLAND."

One of the big scenes in "Babes in Toyland," which comes to the Grand Opera House, in Kingston, on Wednesday, May 17th, and one which has possibly done the most to make the play famous, is the search of the toys. "Every member of the company takes part in this spectacle and each one is dressed to represent some childish plaything. The procession starts from the top of a long glass case which reaches up to the top of the flies and the characters gradually move down until they reach the floor of the stage. It is said to be a very novel idea and reflects much credit upon the author, Captain Mitchell, the stage manager, who conceived the idea. The people in the company in this scene represent toy soldiers, toy drummers, trumpeters, cavalier, generals, colonels, all sorts of dolls, and a hundred and one other things so dear to childish hearts. Mr. Mitchell has so arranged it that each one appears to be a mechanical figure, and throughout the scene this impression is kept up, even to the dances. It is especially trying upon the company, as each one is compelled to keep up their peculiar trembling movement noticeable in automatons.

Smart.... Dressers

Young men are, as a general thing, the smartest dressers.

The up to the moment young man is a sort of a lexicon of clothes style and correctness.

He knows what's what and gets it.

But good fit, the newest colors, patterns, etc., aren't enough; for unless that snappy, jaunty appearance—characteristic of our excellent tailor-made clothing — is there, it isn't what the young man wants.

Our success in pleasing young men is not just "luck." It's due to our knowledge of what the young man wants, and our

ABILITY TO PROVIDE IT FOR HIM.

Then again our prices are always reasonable.

Suits at $7.50, $9, $10 and up to $13.

If you compare our suits at the above prices you will find the style and pattern is right "up-to-date."

Those of our readers who appreciate wholesome amusement should plan to spend the day at Napanee where Sells & Downs Show's will exhibit on Thursday, 25th May. The Daily X-Ray of Charles City said: "The afternoon performance was presented before a tent full of people, who were enthusiastic over every feature. There is an absence of sameness about the Sells & Downs Shows, every part of it being new, novel and artistic. Not a single thing on the bill was omitted, and when the magnificent exhibition ended the great throng filed slowly out, loath to depart from a place which had provided them with such a pleasant afternoon's entertainment. The performance, with variations, will be repeated this evening." See advertisement on page 2.

THE WATCHWORD OF WOMEN.

Modesty is a woman's watchword. Whatever threatens her delicate sense of modesty frightens her. For this reason many a woman permits diseases of the delicate womanly organs to become aggravated because she cannot bring herself to submit to the ordeal of unpleasant questionings, offensive examinations, and obnoxious local treatments, which some physicians find necessary. Doubtless thousands of the women who have taken advantage of Dr. Pierce's offer of free consultation by letter, have been led to do so by the escape thus offered from a treatment repugnant to modesty. Any sick woman may write to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y., in perfect confidence; all letters being treated as strictly private and sacredly confidential, and all answers being sent in plain envelopes with no advertising or other printing upon them. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has been long hailed as "a God-send to women." It makes weak women strong and sick women well. "Favorite Prescription" contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine or other narcotic.

The Wings of the Morning

By LOUIS TRACY

Copyright, 1903, by Edward J. Clode

he was driven. Even in that terrible moment he kept his senses. The girl, utterly unconscious, shoved by the convulsive heaving of her breast that she was choking. With a wild effort he swung her head round to shield her from the flying sand with his own form.

The tiny air space thus provided gave her some relief, and in that instant the sailor seemed to recognize her. He was not remotely capable of a definite idea. Just as he vaguely realized the identity of the woman in his arms the unlikely support oh which he rested toppled over. Again he renewed the unequal contest. A strong, resolute man and a typhoon sea were tied for supremacy.

This time his feet plunged against something gratefully solid. He was dashed forward, still battling with the raging turmoil of water, and a second time he felt the same firm yet smooth surface. His dormant faculties awoke. It was sand. With frenzied desperation, buoyed now by the inspiring hope of safety, he fought his way onward like a maniac.

Often he fell. Three times did the backwash try to drag him to the swirling death behind, but he staggered blindly on, and, still—on the tearing gale ceased to be laden with the suffocating foam, and his faltering feet sank in deep soft white sand.

Then he fell, and could not rise again. With a last weak flicker of exhausted strength he drew the girl closely to him, and the two lay locked tightly together, heedless now of all things.

How long the man remained prostrate he could only guess subsequently. The Sirdar struck soon after day-break, and the sailor awoke to a hazy consciousness of his surroundings to find a shaft of sunshine flickering through the cocoanut palms in the east. The gale was already passing away. Although the wind still whistled with shrill violence, it was more than counterbalanced by the sea, too, though running very high, had retreated many yards from the spot where he had lain. By degrees, and its surface was no longer scourged with venomous spray.

Slowly and painfully he raised himself to a sitting posture, for he was bruised and stiff. With his first movement he became violently ill. He had swallowed much salt water, and it was not until the spasm of sickness had passed that he thought of the girl.

"She cannot be dead," he hoarsely murmured, feebly trying to lift her. "Surely Providence would not desert her after such an escape. What a weak beggar I must be to give in at the last moment! I am sure she was living when we got ashore. What on earth can I do to revive her?"

Forgetful of his own aching limbs in this newborn anxiety, he sank on one knee and gently pillowed Iris' head and shoulders on the other. Her eyes were closed, her lips and teeth firmly set—a fact to which she undoubtedly owed her life, for she would have been suffocated—and the pallor of her skin seemed to be that terrible bloodless hue which indicates death. The stern lines in the man's face relaxed, and something blurred his vision. He was weak from exhaustion and want of food. For the moment his emotions were easily aroused.

"Oh, it is pitiful!" he almost whimpered. "It cannot be!"

With a gesture of despair he drew the sleeve of his thick jersey across his eyes to clear them from the gathering mist. Then he tremblingly endeavored to open the neck of her dress. He was startled to find the girl's eyes wide open and surveying him with shadowy alarm. She was quite conscious.

He staggered blindly on.

"Thank God!" he cried hoarsely. "You are alive."

Her color came back with remarkable rapidity. She tried to assume a sitting posture, and instinctively her hands traveled to her disarranged costume.

"How ridiculous!" she said, with a little note of annoyance in her voice, which sounded curiously hollow. But her brave spirit could not yet command her enfeebled frame. She was perforce compelled to sink back to the support of his knee and arm.

"Do you think you could lie quiet until I try to find some water?" he gasped anxiously.

She nodded a childlike acquiescence, and her eyelids fell. It was only that her eyes shrieked dreadfully from the salt water, but the sailor was sure that this was a premonition of a lapse to unconsciousness.

"Please don't go to faint again," he said. "Don't you think I had better loosen these things? You can breathe more easily."

A ghost of a smile flickered on her lips. "No—no," she murmured. "My eyes hurt me—that is all. Is there—any—water?"

He laid her tenderly on the sand and rose to his feet. His first glance was toward the sea. He saw something which made him blink with astonishment. A heavy sea was still running over the barrier reef which inclosed a small lagoon. The contest between the fierce combers outside and the comparatively smooth surface of the protected pool was very marked. At one time the lagoon was almost completely isolated. Indeed he imagined that only a fierce gale blowing from the northwest would enable the waves to leap the reef, and even then a strip of broken water, surging far into the small natural harbor, betrayed the position of the tiny entrance.

Yet at this very point a fine cocoanut palm reared its stately column high in air, and its long, tremulous fronds were now swinging within three feet of the sea. From where he stood it appeared to be growing in the midst of the sea, for huge breakers completely hid the coral embankment. This sentinel of the land had a weirdly impressive effect. It was the only fixed object in the waste of foam capped waves. Even a vestige of the Sirdar remained seaward, but the sand was littered with wreckage, and—mournful spectacle—a considerable number of inanimate human forms lay huddled up amid the relics of the steamer.

This discovery stirred him to action. He turned to seek for a spot on which he was stranded with his helpless companion. To his great relief he discovered that it was lofty and tree clad. He knew that the island could not have drifted to Borneo, which still lay far to the south. This must be one of the hundreds of islands which, in the China seas, afford ample resorts for Malan fishermen. Probably it was inhabited, though he thought it strange that none of the boats had put in an appearance. In any event water and food of some sort were assured. But before setting out upon his quest two things demanded attention. The girl must be removed from her present position. It would be too horrible to permit her first conscious gaze to rest upon those crumpled objects on the beach. Common humanity demanded, too, that he should hastily examine each of the bodies in case life was not wholly extinct.

So he bent over the girl, noting with sudden wonder that, weak as she was, she had managed to refasten part of her bodice.

"You must permit me to carry you a little farther inland," he explained gently.

Without another word he lifted her in his arms, marveling somewhat at the strength which came of necessity, and bore her some little distance until a sturdy rock jutting out of the sand offered shelter from the wind and protection from the sea and its revelations.

"I am so cold and tired," murmured Iris. "Is there any water? My throat hurts me."

He pressed back the tangled hair from her forehead as he might soothe a child.

"Try to lie still for a very few minutes," he said. "You have not long to suffer. I will return immediately."

His own throat and palate were on fire and his head ached, but he first hurried back to the edge of the lagoon. There were fourteen bodies in all, three women and eleven men, four of the latter being Lascars. The women were saloon passengers whom he did not know. One of the men was the surgeon, another the first officer, a third Sir John Tozer. The rest were passengers and members of the crew. They were all dead; some had been peacefully drowned, others were fearfully mangled by the rocks. Two of the Lascars, bearing signs of dreadful injuries, were lying on a cluster of low rocks overhanging the water. The remainder rested on the sand.

The sailor exhibited no visible emotion while he conducted his sad scrutiny. Then he was assured that this silent company was beyond mortal help he at once strode away toward the nearest belt of trees. He could not tell how long the search for water might be protracted, and there was pressing need for it.

When he reached the first clump of brushwood he uttered a delighted exclamation. There, growing in prodigal luxuriance, was the bamboo pitcher plant, whose lids are curled up leaf, shaped like a teacup, not only holds a lasting quantity of rain water, but mixes therewith its own palatable and natural juices.

With his knife he severed two of the leaves and hastened to Iris with the precious beverage. She heard him and managed to raise herself on an elbow. The poor girl's eyes glistened at the prospect of relief. Without a word of question or surprise she swallowed the contents of both leaves.

Then she found utterance. "How odd it tastes. What is it?" she inquired.

But the eagerness with which she quenched her thirst renewed his own momentarily forgotten torture. His tongue seemed to swell. He was absolutely unable to reply.

The water revived Iris like a magic draft. Her quick intuition told her what had happened.

"You have had none yourself!" she cried. "Go at once and get some! And please bring me some more!"

He required no second bidding. After hastily gulping down the contents of several leaves he returned with a further supply. Iris was now sitting up. The sun had burst royally through the clouds, and her chilled limbs were gaining some degree of warmth and elasticity.

"What is it?" she repeated after another delicious draft.

"The leaf of the pitcher plant. Nature is not always cruel. In an unusually generous mood she devised this method of storing water."

Miss Deane reached out her hand for more. Her troubled brain refused to wonder at such a reply from an ordinary seaman. The sailor deliberately spilled the contents of a remaining leaf on the sand.

"No, madam," he said, with an odd mixture of deference and firmness. "No more at present. I must first procure you some food."

She looked up at him in momentary silence.

"The ship is lost?" she said after a pause.

"Yes, madam."

"Are we the only people saved?"

"I fear so."

"Is this a desert island?"

"I think not, madam. It may by chance be temporarily uninhabited, but fishermen from China come to all these places. I have seen no other living beings except ourselves. Nevertheless the islanders may live on the south side."

"It surely cannot be possible that the Sirdar has gone to pieces—a magnificent vessel of her size and strength?"

He answered quietly: "It is too true, madam. I suppose you hardly knew she struck, it happened so suddenly. Afterward, fortunately for you, you were unconscious."

"How do you know?" she inquired quickly. A flood of vivid recollection was pouring in upon her.

"I—er—well, I happened to be near you, madam, when the ship broke up, and we—er—drifted ashore together."

She rose and faced him. "I remember now," she cried hysterically. "You caught me as I was thrown into the corridor. We fell into the sea when the vessel turned over. You have saved my life. Were it not for you I could not possibly have escaped."

She gazed at him more earnestly, see ing that he blushed beneath the crust of salt and sand that covered his face. "Why," she went on, with growing assurance, "you are the steward I noticed in the saloon yesterday. How is it that you are now dressed as a sailor?"

He answered readily enough. "There was an accident on board during the gale, madam. I am a fair sailor, but a poor steward, so I applied for transfer. As there was a short handed, my offer was accepted."

Iris was now looking at him intently. "You saved my life," she repeated slowly. It seemed that this obvious fact needed to be indelibly established in her mind. Indeed the girl was overwrought by all that she had gone through. Only by degrees were her thoughts marshalling themselves with lucid coherence. As yet she recalled so many dramatic incidents that they failed to assume due proportion.

But quickly there came memories of Captain Ross, of Sir John and Lady Tozer, of the doctor, the maid, the hundred and one individualities of her pleasant life aboard ship. Could it be that they were all dead? The notion was monstrous. But the ghastly significance was instantly borne in upon her by the plight in which she stood. Her lips quivered; the tears trembled in her eyes.

"Is it really true that all the ship's company except ourselves are lost?" she brokenly demanded.

The sailor's gravely earnest glance fell before hers. "Unhappily there is no room for doubt," he said.

"Are you quite, quite sure?"

"I am sorrowfully sure." Involuntarily he turned seaward.

She understood him. She sank to her knees, covered her face with her hands and broke into a passion of weeping. With a look of infinite pity he stooped and would have touched her shoulder, but he suddenly restrained the impulse. Something had hardened this man. It cost him an effort to be callous, but he succeeded. His mouth tightened, and his expression lost its tenderness.

"Come, come, my dear lady," he exclaimed, and there was a tinge of studied roughness in his voice, "you must calm yourself. It is the fortune of shipwreck as well as of war, you know. We are alive and you must look after ourselves. Those who have gone are beyond our help."

"But not beyond our sympathy," wailed Iris, uncovering her streaming eyes for a fleeting look at him. Even in the utter desolation of the moment she could not help marveling that this queer mannered sailor, who spoke like a gentleman and tried to pose as her inferior, who had rescued her with the utmost gallantry, who carried his quixotic zeal to the point of her supplying his needs when he was in far worse case himself, should be so utterly indifferent to the fate of others.

He waited silently until her sobs ceased.

"Now, madam," he said, "it is essential that we should obtain some food. You have had no nourishment for many hours, and I am better acquainted with our whereabouts. Can you walk a little way toward the trees, or shall I assist you?"

Iris immediately stood up. She pressed her hair back defiantly.

"Certainly I can walk," she answer ed. "What do you propose to do?"

"Well, madam"—

"What is your name?" she interrupted imperiously.

"Jenks, madam. Robert Jenks."

"Thank you. Now listen, Mr. Robert Jenks. My name is Miss Iris Deane. On board ship I was a passenger and you were a steward—that is, until you became a seaman. Here we are equals in misfortune, but in all else you are the leader. I am quite useless. I can only help in matters by your direction.

Plodding together through the sand.

so I do not wish to be addressed as 'madam' in every breath. Do you understand me?"

"As you wish, Miss Deane," he said. "The fact remains that I have many things to attend to, and we really must eat something."

"What can we eat?"

"Let us find out," he replied, scanning the nearest trees with keen scrutiny.

They plodded together through the sand in silence. Physically they were a superb couple, but in raiment they resembled scarecrows. Both, of course, were bareheaded. The sailor's jersey and trousers were old and torn, and the sea water still soughed loudly in his heavy boots with each step.

But Iris was in a deplorable plight. Her hair fell in a great wave of golden brown strands over her neck and shoulders. Every hairpin had vanished, but with a few dexterous twists she coiled the flying tresses into a loose knot. Her beautiful muslin dress was rent and dragged. It was drying rapidly under the ever increasing power of the sun, and she surreptitiously endeavored to complete the fastening of the open portion about her neck.

Suddenly he gave a glad shout. "By Jove, Miss Deane, we are in luck's way! There is a fine plantain tree."

The pangs of hunger could not be resisted. Although the fruit was hardly ripe, they tore at the great bunches and ate ravenously. Iris made no pretense in the matter, and the sailor was in worse plight, for he had been on duty continuously since 4 o'clock the previous afternoon.

At last their appetite was somewhat appeased, though plantains might not appeal to a gourmand as the solitary joint.

"Now," decided Jenks, "you must rest here a little while, Miss Deane. I'm going back to the beach. You need not be afraid. There are no animals to harm you, and I will not be far away."

"What are you going to do on the beach?" she demanded.

"To rescue stores, for the most part."

"May I not come with you. I can be of some little service surely?"

He answered slowly: "Please oblige me by remaining here at present. In less than an hour I will return, and then perhaps you will find plenty to do."

She read his meaning intuitively and shivered. "I could not do that," she murmured. "I would faint. While you are away I will pray for them, my unfortunate friends."

As he passed from her side he heard her sobbing quietly.

When he reached the lagoon he halted suddenly. Something startled him. He was quite certain that he had counted fourteen corpses. Now there were only twelve. The two Lascars who had been lying on the small group of rocks on the verge of the lagoon had vanished.

Where had they gone?

CHAPTER III.

THE sailor wasted no time in idle bewilderment. He searched carefully for traces of the missing Lascars. He came to the conclusion that the bodies had been dragged from off the sun dried rocks into the lagoon by some agency the nature of which he could not even conjecture.

They were lying many feet above the sea level when he last saw them, little more than half an hour earlier. At that point the beach shelved rapidly. He could look far into the depths of the pellucid water. Nothing was visible there save several varieties of small fish.

The incident puzzled and annoyed him. Still thinking about it, he sat down on the highest rock and pulled off his heavy boots to empty the water out. He also divested himself of his stockings and spread them out to dry.

The action reminded him of Miss Deane's necessities. He hurried to a point whence he could call out to her and recommend her to dry some of her clothing during his absence. He uttered a cry quickly, fearing lest he should be seen. Iris had already displayed to the sunlight a large portion of her costume.

Without further delay he set about a disagreeable but necessary task. From the pockets of the first officer and doctor he secured two revolvers and a supply of cartridges, evidently intended to settle any dispute which might have arisen between the ship's officers and the native members of the crew. He hoped the cartridges were uninjured, but he could not test them at the moment for fear of alarming Miss Deane.

Both officers carried pocketbooks and purses. In one of these, containing a considerable number of English sovereigns, he found a few shillings in silver. He put the money in his own pocket. Then he searched the pockets of the dead Lascars. They were empty.

Next he examined the pockets of the women. Miss Deane's maid had a purse containing a few coins, and Lady Tozer had a gold watch and chain. He took the latter, and also a diamond ring from the little quay of rock. He knew they would not be seen again.

He arose and shook himself like a dog. The gruesome task was done. He gathered the clothes and other articles into a heap and placed portions of shattered packing cases near to mislead Iris. While thus engaged he kicked up out of the sand a rusty cresse, of Malay sword. The presence of this implement startled him. He examined it swiftly and threw it out of sight.

Then he went back to her, after donning his stockings and boots, now thoroughly dry.

"Are you ready now, Miss Deane?" he sang out cheerily.

"Ready? I have been waiting for you."

Jenks chuckled quietly. "I must guard my tongue. It betrays me," he said to himself.

Iris joined him. By some mysterious means she had effected great improvement in her appearance. Yet there were manifest gaps.

"If only I had a needle and thread"—she began.

"If that is all," said the sailor, fumbling in his pockets. He produced a shabby little hussif containing a thimble, scissors, needles and some skeins of unbleached thread. Case and contents were evidently the property of the ship's purser, but the girl fastened upon this treasure with a sigh of deep content.

"Now, please," she cried, "I want a telegraph office or a ship."

When they reached the sands she caught sight of the pile of clothes and the broken woodwork, and the mask fell. Jenks had been methodically arranged. The harmless subterfuge did not deceive her. She darted a quick look of gratitude at the speaker. How thoughtful he was! After a fearful glance around she was reassured, though she wondered what had become of—

"I see you have been busy," she said, nodding toward the clothes and boots.

"Yes," he replied simply. "Lucky that wasn't it?"

"Most fortunate. When they are quite dry I will replenish my wardrobe. What is the first thing to be done?"

"Well, Miss Deane, I think our programme is, in the first place, to examine the articles thrown ashore and see if any of the cases contain food. Secondly, we should haul high and dry everything that may be of use to us, lest the weather should break again and the next tide sweep away the spoil. Thirdly, we should eat and rest, and, finally, we must explore the island before the light fails. I am convinced we are not on a small place at the best, and if any Chinamen were ashore they would have put in an appearance long since."

"Do you think, then, that we may remain here long?"

"It is impossible to form an opinion on that point. The next ship may come in a day. On the other hand"—

"Yes?"

"It is a wise thing, Miss Deane, to prepare for other contingencies."

"Do you mean," she said slowly, "that we may be imprisoned here for weeks, perhaps months?"

"I would rather my mind back a few hours you will perhaps admit that we are very fortunate to be here at all."

She whisked round upon him. "Do not fence with my question, Mr. Jenks. Answer me!"

He bowed. There was a perceptible return of his stubborn cynicism when he spoke.

"The facts are obvious, Miss Deane. The loss of the Sirdar will not be definitely known for many days. It will be assumed that she has broken down. The agents in Singapore will await cabled tidings of her whereabouts. She might have drifted anywhere in that typhoon. Ultimately they will send out a vessel to search, impelled to that course a little earlier or later by gratitude to you. Pardon me, I did not intend to pain you. I am speaking my mind."

"Go on," said Iris bravely.

"The relief ship must search the entire China sea. The gale might have driven a disabled steamer north, south, east or west. A typhoon is not in a hurry at this time—like a cyclone. It moves in a whirling spiral, you see, and the direction of a drifting ship depends wholly upon the locality where she sustained the storm. The coasts of China, Java, Borneo and the Philippines are not equipped with lighthouses on every headland and cordoned with telegraph wires. There are river pirates and savages races to be reckoned with. Casting aside all other possibilities and assuming that a prompt search is made in the south of our course, this part of the ocean is full of reefs and small islands, some inhabited permanently, others visited occasionally by fishermen." She was about to add something, but checked herself.

"You may have to remain here for many days, even months. There is always a chance of speedy help. We must act, however, on the basis of the former, and on indefinite period. I am discussing appearances as they are. A survey of the island may change all these views."

"In that way?"

He turned and pointed to the summit of the tree covered hill behind them.

"From that point," he said, "we may see other and larger islands. If so, they will certainly be inhabited. I am surprised this one is not."

He ended abruptly. They were losing time. Before Iris could join him he was already hauling a large undamaged case out of the water.

He laughed unmirthfully. "Champagne!" he said. "A good brand too!"

This man was certainly an enigma. Iris wrinkled her pretty forehead in the effort to place him in a fitting category. His words and accent were those of an educated gentleman, yet his actions and manners were studiously uncouth when he thought she was observing him. The veneer of roughness peeled her. That he was naturally of refined temperament she knew quite well, not alone by perception, but by the plain evidence of his earlier dealings with her.

To the best of her ability she silently helped in the work of salvage. They found a queer collection. A case of champagne and another of brandy, a box of books, a pair of night glasses, a compass, several boxes of ship's bis cuit, seated with salt, but saved by their hardness, having been immersed but a few seconds; two large cases of tinned meat in good condition, some rouge dish covers, a bit of twisted ironwork and a great quantity of cordage and timber.

There was one very heavy package, which their united strength could not lift. The sailor searched around until he found an iron bar that could be wrenched from its socket. With this he pried open the strong outer cover and revealed the contents—regulation boxes of ammunition, each containing 500 rounds.

"Ah!" he cried. "Now we want some rifles."

"What good would they be?" inquired Iris.

He softly denounced himself as a fool, but the words rushed at once: "To shoot birds, of course, Miss Deane. There are plenty here, and many of them are edible."

They worked in silence for another hour. The sun was nearing the zenith. They were distressed with the increasing heat of the day. Jenks secured a supply of some biscuits, some pieces of driftwood and the binoculars and invited Miss Deane to accompany him to the grove. She obeyed without a word.

She wondered how he proposed to light a fire. To contribute something toward the expected feast she picked up a dish cover and a bottle of champagne.

The sailor eyed the concluding item with disfavor. "Not while the sun is up," he said. "In the evening, yes."

"It was for you," explained Iris coldly. "I do not drink wine."

"You must break the pledge while you are here, Miss Deane. It is often very cold at night in this latitude. A chill would mean fever and perhaps death."

She covertly watched his preparations. He drew a dry leaf from a notebook and broke the bullet out of a cartridge, damping the powder with water from a pitcher plant. Smearing the composition on the paper, he placed it in the sun, where it dried at once. He gathered a small bundle of withered spines from the palms and arranged the driftwood on top, choosing a place for his bonfire just within the shade. Then inserting the touch paper among the spines he uncovered one of the lenses of the binoculars, converted it into a burning glass and had a fine blaze roaring merrily in a few minutes. With the aid of pointed sticks he grilled some slices of ham, cut with his clasp knife, which he first carefully cleaned in the sea. He roasted the fruit of the variety that become soft when toasted, and so he balanced a few by stones near the fire.

Iris forgot her appearance in her interest. A most appetising smell filled the air. They were having a picnic amidst delightful surroundings. Yesterday at this time—She almost yielded to a rush of sentiment, but forced it back with instant determination. Tears were a poor resource, reminiscent of God's goodness to herself and her companion. Without the sailor, what would become of her, even were she thrown ashore while still living? She knew some of the expedients which seemed to be at his command.

"Can I do nothing to help?" she exclaimed. Its cousin was her tone that he was astonished.

"Yes," he said, pointing to the fish with a sharp stick. "Keep one of those eyes upon them lest they burn. I will serve as a plate. Luncheon is ready."

He neatly dished up two slices of ham on a couple of biscuits and handed them to her with the clasp knife.

"I can depend on my fingers," he explained. "It will not be the first time I have eaten my food with the clasp knife."

"Have you led an adventurous life?" she asked, by way of polite conversation.

"No," he growled.

"I only thought so because you appear to know all sorts of dodges for prolonging existence—things I never heard of.

"Broiled ham—and biscuits—for instance?"

At another time Iris would have snapped at him for the retort. Still humbly, regretful for her previous attitude, she answered meekly:

"Yes, in this manner of cooking them, I mean. But there are other items—methods of lighting fires, finding water, knowing what fruits and other articles may be found on a desert island, such as plantains and cocoanuts and certain sorts of birds."

When the meal was ended Jenks sprang lightly to his feet. Rest and food had restored his faculties. The girl thought dreamily, as he stood there in his rough attire, that she had never seen a finer man. He was tall, sinewy and well formed. In repose his face was pleasant, if masterful. Its somewhat sullen, self contained expression was occasional and acquired. She wondered how he could be so energetic. Personally she was consumed with sleepiness.

He produced a revolver.

"Do you mind if I fire a shot to test these cartridges?" he asked. "The powder is all right, but the fulminate in the caps may be damaged."

She agreed promptly. He pointed the weapon at a distant cocoanut, and there was a loud report. Two nuts fell to the ground, and the air was filled with shrill screams and the flapping of innumerable wings. Iris was momentarily dismayed, but her senses confirmed the sailor's explanation —"Sea birds."

"Can you use a revolver?" he asked.

"My father taught me. He thinks every woman should know how to defend herself if need be."

"Excellent. Well, Miss Deane, you must try to sleep for a couple of hours. I purpose examining the coast for some distance on each side. Should you want me, a shot will be the best sort of signal."

"I am very tired," she admitted. "But you?"

"Oh, I am all right! I feel restless—that is, I mean I will not be able to sleep until night comes, and before we climb the hill to survey our domain I want to find better quarters than we now possess."

Perhaps were she less fatigued she would have caught the vague anxiety, the note of distrust, in his voice. But the carpet of soft sand on which she lay was very seductive. Her eyes closed. She nestled into a comfortable position and slept.

The sun was in the revolver out of harm's way to a spot where she must see it instantly, pulled his sou'wester well over his eyes and walked off quietly.

They were flung ashore on the northwest side of the island. Except for the cove formed by the lagoon, which is mysterious palm tree growing apparently in the midst of the waves, the shape of the coast was roughly that of the concave side of a bow, its two visible extremities being about three-quarters of a mile apart.

He guessed by the way in which the sea raged past these points that the land did not extend beyond them. Behind him it rose steeply to a considerable height, 150 or 200 feet. The center was the tallest hill, which seemed to end abruptly toward the southwest. On the northeast side it was connected with a rocky promontory by a ridge of easy grade. The sailor turned to the southwest as offering the most likely direction for rapid survey.

He was not surprised to find that the hill terminated in a sheer wall of rock, which stood out, ominous and massive, from the verdure clothing the remainder of the ridge. Facing the precipice and separated from it by a strip of ground not twenty feet above the sea level lay the lagoon part was another rock built eminence quite bare of trees, blackened by the weather and scarred in a number of places by the effects of lightning.

The intervening belt was sparsely dotted with trees, casuarina, poon and other woods he did not know, and tufting cocoanut and cedar. A number of stumps showed that the ax had been at work, but not recently. He passed into the belt and climbed a tree that offered easy access. As he expected, after rising a few feet from the ground his eyes encountered the solemn boundaries of the sea, not half a mile distant.

He descended and commenced a systematic search. Men had been here. Was there a house? Would he suddenly encounter some hermit Malay or Chinaman?

At the foot of the main cliff was a cluster of fruit bearing cocoanut palms, areca nuts and wood palms. A couple of cinchonas caught his eye. In one spot the undergrowth was rank and vividly green. In a cleared, sunny space a tapioca plant, reared its high passion flower leaves above the grass, and some gaga palms thrust aloft their thick stemmed tresses.

"Here is a change of menu, at any rate," he communed.

Breaking a thick branch off a poon tree, he whittled away the minor stems. A strong stick was needful to explore that leafy fastness thoroughly.

A few cautious strides and vigorous blows with the stick laid bare the cause of such prodigality in a soil covered with dirtied sand and lumps of black and white spawn. The poon trees and bushes inclosed a well-nigh guarded, in fact, from being choked with sand during the first gale of the season.

Delighted with this discovery, more precious than diamonds at the moment—for he doubted the advisability of existing on the water supply of the pitcher plant—he knelt to peer into excavation. The well had been prepared by man. Ten feet down he could see a reflection of his face. Expert knowledge had tapped the secret reservoir of the island. By scratching to the full ex-test of his arm he managed to plunge the stick into the water. Tasting the drops, he found that they were quite sweet. The sand and coral rock provided the best of filter beds.

He rose, well pleased, and noted that on the opposite side the appearance of the sands and ruts of long gone days indicated the existence of a grown over path toward the cliff. He followed it, walking carelessly, with eyes seeking the prospect beyond, when something rattled and cracked beneath his feet Looking down, he was horrified to find he was trampling on a skeleton.

Had a venomous snake coiled its glittening folds around his leg he would not have been more startled. But this man of iron nerve soon recovered. He frowned deeply after the first involuntary heart throb.

With the stick he cleared away the undergrowth and revealed the skeleton of a man. The bones were big and strong, but oxidised by the action of the air. Jenks had injured the left tibia by his tread, but three fractured ribs and a smashed shoulder blade told some terrible unwritten story.

Beneath the mouldering relics were fragments of decayed cloth. It was blue serge. Lying about were a few blackened objects, brass buttons marked with an anchor. The dead man's boots were in the best state of preservation, but the leather had shrunk, and the nails protruded like fangs.

A rusted pocketknife lay there, and on the left breast of the skeleton rested a round piece of tin, the top of a canister, which might have reposed in a coat pocket. Jenks picked it up. Some curious marks and figures were punched into its surface. After a hasty glance he put it aside for more leisurely examination.

No weapon was visible. He could form no estimate as to the cause of the death of this poor mariner, but at the time since the tragedy had occurred.

Jenks must have stood many minutes before he perceived that the skeleton was headless. At first he imagined that in rummaging about with the stick he had disturbed the skull. But after minute search demonstrated that it had gone—had been taken away. In fact—for the plants which so effectually screened the lighter bones would not permit the skull to vanish.

Then the frown on the sailor's face became threatening, thunderous. He recollected the rusty creese. Indistinct memories of strange tales of the China sea crowded unbidden to his brain.

"Dyaks!" he growled fiercely. "A ship's officer, an Englishman probably, murdered by head hunting Dyak pirates!"

If they came once they would come again.

Five hundred yards away Iris Deane was sleeping. He ought not to have left her alone. And then, with the devilish ingenuity of coincidence, a revolver shot awoke the echoes and sent all manner of wild fowl hurtling through the trees with clamorous outcry.

Panting and with eyed, Jenks was at the girl's side in an inconceivably short space of time. She was sitting beneath the shelter of the grove, but on the sands, gazing, pallid in cheek and lip, at the group of rocks on the edge of the lagoon.

"What is the matter?" he gasped.

"Oh, I don't know!" she wailed brokenly. "I had a dream, such a horrible dream. You were struggling with some awful thing down there." She pointed to the rocks.

"It was not near the place," he said laboriously. It cost him an effort to breathe. His broad chest expanded inches with each respiration.

"I see, yes, I understand. But I awoke and ran to save you. When I got here I saw something, a thing with waving arms, and fired. It vanished, and then you came."

The sailor walked slowly to the rocks. A fresh chip out of the stone showed where the bullet struck. One huge bowlder was wet, as if water had been splashed over it. He halted and looked intently into the water. Not a fish was to be seen, but small spirals of sand were eddying up from the bottom, where it shelved steeply from the shore.

Iris followed him. "See!" she cried excitedly. "I was not mistaken. There was something here."

A creepy sensation ran up the man's spine and passed behind his ears. At this spot the drowned Lascars were lying. Like an inspiration came the knowledge that the cuttlefish, the dreaded octopus, abounds in the China sea.

His face was livid when he turned to Iris. "You are overwrought by fatigue, Miss Deane," he said. "What you saw was probably a seal." He knew the ludicrous substitution would not be considered. "Please go and lie down again."

"I cannot," she protested. "I am too frightened."

"Frightened! By a dream! In broad daylight!"

"But why are you so pale? What has alarmed you?"

"Can you ask? Did you not give the agreed signal?"

"Yes, but"—

Her inquiring glance fell. He was breathless from agitation rather than running. He was perturbed on her account. For an instant she had looked into his soul.

"I will go back," she said quietly, "though I would rather accompany you. What are you doing?"

"Seeking a place to lay our heads," he answered, with gruff carelessness. "You really must rest, Miss Deane. Otherwise you will be broken up by fatigue and become ill."

So Iris again sought her couch of sand, and the sailor returned to the skeleton. They separated unwillingly, each thinking only of the other's safety and comfort.

CHAPTER IV.

ACROSS the parched bones lay the thick disorder of long locks in his alarm. He picked it up and resumed his progress along the pathway. So closely did he now examine the ground that he hardly noted his direction. The track led straight toward the wall of rock. The distance was not great—about forty yards. At first the brushwood impeded him, but soon even this hindrance disappeared, and a well defined passage meandered through a belt of trees, some strong and lofty, others quite immature.

More bushes gathered at the foot of the cliff. Behind them he could see the mouth of a cave. The six months' old growth of vegetation about the entrance gave clear indication as to the time which had elapsed since a human foot last disturbed the solitude.

A few vigorous blows with the stick cleared away obstructing plants and leafy branches. The sailor stooped and looked into the cavern, for the opening was barely five feet high. He perceived instantly that the excavation was man's handiwork applied to a fault in the hard rock. A sort of natural shaft existed, and this had been extended by manual labor. Beyond the entrance the cave became more lofty. Owing to its position with reference to the sun at that hour Jenks imagined that sufficient light would be obtainable when the tropical luxuriance of foliage outside was dispensed with.

At present the interior was dark. With the stick he tapped the walls and roof. A startled cluck and the rush of wings heralded the flight of two birds alarmed by the noise. Soon his eyes, more accustomed to the gloom, made out that the place was about thirty feet deep, ten feet wide in the center and seven or eight feet high.

At the farther end was a collection of objects inviting prompt attention. Each moment he could see more distinctly. Kneeling on one side of the little pile, he discerned that on a large stone serving as a rude bench were some tin canisters, a rusty knife, a servant and a quantity of empty cartridge cases. Between the stone and what a miner terms the "face" of the rock was a four foot space. Here, half imbedded in the sand which covered the floor, were two pickaxes, a shovel, a sledge hammer, a thin timber felling ax and three crowbars.

In the darkest corner of the cave's extremity the "wall" appeared to be wet. They could be scraped with the stick, and there was a sharp clang of tin. He discovered six square kerosene oil cases carefully stacked up. Three were empty, one seemed to be half full, and the contents of two were untouched. With almost feverish haste he ascertained that the half filled tin did really contain oil.

"What a find!" he ejaculated aloud.

So far as he could judge, the cave harbored no further curiosities. Returning toward the exit, his boots dislodged more empty cartridges from the sand. They were shells adapted to a revolver of heavy caliber. At a short distance from the doorway they were present in dozens.

"The remnants of a fight," he thought. "The man was attacked and defended himself here. Not expecting the arrival of enemies, he provided no store of food or water. He was killed while trying to reach the well, probably at night."

He vividly pictured the scene—a brave, hardy European keeping at bay a boat load of Dyak corsairs, enduring manfully the agonies of hunger, thirst, perhaps wounds; then the siege, followed by a last effort to gain the life giving well, the hiss of a Malay parang wielded by a lurking foe and the last despairing struggle before death came.

He might be mistaken. Perchance there was a less dramatic explanation. But he could not shake off his first impressions.

"What was the poof devil doing here?" he asked. "Why did he bury himself in this rock, with mining utensils and a few rough stores? He could not be a castaway. There is the indication of purpose, of preparation, of method combined with ignorance, for none who knows the ways of Dyaks and Chinese pirates would venture to live here alone if he could help it, and if he really were alone."

There was relief in hearing his own voice. He could hum and think aloud. Arming himself with the ax, he attacked the bushes and branches of trees in front of the cave. He cut a fresh approach to the well and threw the litter over the skeleton. At first he was inclined to bury it where it lay, but he disliked the idea of Iris walking unconsciously over the place. No time could be wasted that day. He would seize an early opportunity to act as gravedigger.

After an absence of little more than an hour he rejoined the girl. She saw him from afar and wondered whence he obtained the ax he shouldered.

"You are a successful explorer," she cried when he drew near.

"Yes, Miss Deane. I have found water, implements, a shelter, even light."

"What sort of light?"

"Oil."

"And the shelter—is it a house?"

"No, a cave. If you are sufficiently rested you might come and take possession."

Her eyes danced with excitement. He, told her what he had seen, with reservations, and, she took on before him to witness these marrels.

"Why did you make a new path to the well?" she inquired after a rapid survey.

"A new path!" The pertinent question staggered him.

"Yes, the people who lived here must have had some sort of free passage."

He lied easily. "I have only cleared away recent growth," he said.

"And why did they dig a cave? It surely would be much more simple to build a house from all these trees."

"There you puzzle me," he said frankly.

They had entered the cavern but a little way and now came out.

"These empty cartridges are funny. They suggest a fort, a battle." Womanlike, her words were carelessly chosen, but they were crammed with inductive force.

Embarked on the toboggan slope of untruth, the sailor slid smoothly downward.

"Events have colored your imagination, Miss Deane. Even in England men often preserve such things for future use. They can be reloaded."

"Yes, I have seen keepers do that. This is different. There is an air of"—

"There is a lot to be done," broke in Jenks emphatically. "We must climb the hill and get back here in time to light another fire before the moon goes down. I want to prop a canvas sheet in front of the cave and try to devise a lamp."

"Must I sleep inside?" demanded Iris. "Yes. Where else?"

There was a pause, a mere whiff of awkwardness.

"I will mount guard outside," went on Jenks. He was trying to improve the edge of the ax by grinding it on a soft stone.

The girl went into the cave again. She was inquisitive, uneasy.

"That arrangement"—she began, but ended in a sharp cry of terror. The dispossessed birds had returned during the sailor's absence.

"I will kill them!" he shouted in anger.

"Please don't. There has been enough of death in this place already."

The words jarred on his ears. Then he felt that she could only allude to the victims of the wreck.

"I was going to say," she explained, "that we must devise a partition. There is no help for it until you construct a sort of hut. Candidly, I do not like this hole in the rock. It is a vault, a tomb."

"You told me that I was in command, yet you dispute my orders." He strove hard to appear brusquely good humored, indifferent, though for one of his mold he was absurdly sensitive. The cause was overstrain, but that explanation escaped him.

"Quite true. But if sleeping in the cold, in dew or rain, is bad for me, it must be equally bad for you, and without you I am helpless, you know."

He laughed sardonically, and the harsh note clashed with her frank candor. Here at least she was utterly deceived. His changeful moods were incomprehensible.

"I will serve you to the best of my ability, Miss Deane," he exclaimed. "We must hope for a speedy rescue, and I am handy with timber. It is otherwise with you. Are you ready for the climb?"

The crest of the hill was tree covered, yet they could see the sea beyond their immediate locality until the sailor found a point higher than the rest, where a rugged collection of hard basalt and the uprooting of some poon trees provided an open space elevated above the ridge.

For a short distance the foothold was precarious. Jenks helped the girl in this part of the climb. His strong, gentle grasp gave her confidence. She was flushed with exertion when they stood together on the summit of this elevated perch. They could look to every point of the compass except a small section of the southwest. Here the trees rose behind them until the brow of the precipice was reached.

The emergence into a sunlit panorama of land and sea, though expected, was profoundly enthralling. They appeared to stand almost exactly in the center of the island, which was crescent shaped. It was not more than the sailor had estimated. The new slopes now revealed were covered with verdure down to the beach. Behind the water, which for nearly a mile seaward broke over jagged reefs. The sea looked strangely calm from this height. Irregular blue patches were the hardest to south and east caught the man's first glance. He unslung the binoculars he still carried and focused them eagerly.

"Islands," he cried, "and big ones too!"

"How odd!" whispered Iris, more concerned in the scrutiny of her immediate surroundings. Jenks glanced at her sharply. She was not looking at the islands, but at a curious hollow, a quarry-like depression beneath them to the right, distant about 300 yards and not far removed from the small plateau containing the well, though isolated from it by the south angle of the main cliff.

Here, in a great circle, there was not a vestige of grass, shrub or tree, nothing save brown rock and sand. At first the sailor deemed it to be the dried up bed of a small lake. This hypothesis could not serve, else it would be choked with verdure. The pit stared up at them like an ominous eye, though neither paid further attention to it, for the glorious panorama ranged at their feet momentarily swept aside all other considerations.

"What a beautiful place!" murmured Iris. "I wonder what it is called."

"Suppose we christen it Rainbow island?"

"Why 'Rainbow?'"

"From the English meaning of 'Iris' in Latin, you know."

"So it is. How clever of you to think of it! Tell me, what is the meaning of 'Robert' in Greek?"

He turned to survey the northwest side of the island. "I do not know," he answered. "It might not be fartetched to translate is as 'a ship's steward, a menial.'"

Miss Iris had meant her question for a mere light hearted quibble. It annoyed her, a young person of much consequence, to have her kindly condescension repelled.

"I suppose so," she agreed, "but I have gone through so much in a few hours that I am bewildered, apt to forget these nice distinctions."

Jenks was closely examining the reef on which the Sirdar struck. Some portions were visible above the palm tree. The sun, glinting on the waves, rendered it difficult to discern their significance.

"What do you make of those?" he inquired, handing the glasses and blandly ignoring Miss Deane's petulance. Her brain was busy with other things while she twisted the binoculars to suit her vision. Rainbow island—Iris—it was a nice conceit, but "menial" struck a discordant note. This man was no menial in appearance or speech. Why was he so deliberately rude?

"I think they are boxes or packing cases," she announced.

"Ah, that was my own idea! I must visit that locality."

"How? Will you swim?"

"No," he said, his stern lips relaxing in a smile; "I will not swim, and, by the way, Miss Deane, be careful when you are near the water. The lagoon is swarming with sharks at present. I feel tolerably assured that at low tide, when the remnants of the gale have vanished, I will be able to walk there along the reef."

"Sharks!" she cried. "In there! What horrible surprises this speck of land conceals! I should have imagined that sharks and seals could live together!"

"You are quite right," he explained, with becoming gravity. "As a rule, sharks infest only the leeward side of these islands. Just now they are attracted in shoals by the wreck."

"Oh!" Iris shivered slightly.

"We had better go back now. The wind is keen here, Miss Deane."

Then he saw that he grievously misunderstood her gesture. His attitude conveyed a rebuke. There was no further room for sentiment in their present existence. They had to deal with chill necessities. As for the sailor, he was glad that the chance turn of their conversation enabled him to warn her against the lurking dangers of the lagoon. There was no need to mention the devilfish now. He must spare her all avoidable thrills.

They gathered the stores from the first dining room and reached the cave without incident. Another fire was lighted, and while Iris attended to the kitchen the sailor felled several young trees. He wanted poles, and these were the right size and shape. He soon cleared a considerable space. The timber was soft and so small in girth that three cuts with the ax usually sufficed. He dragged the boughs from the smallest tarpaulin he could find and propped it against the rock in such a manner that it effectually screened the mouth of the cave, though admitting light and air.

He was so busy that he paid little heed to Iris. But the odor of fried ham was wafted to him. He was lifting a couple of heavy stones to stay the canvas and keep it from flapping in the wind when the girl called out:

"Wouldn't you like to have a wash before dinner?"

He straightened himself and looked at her. Her face and hands were shining, spotless. The change was so great that his brow wrinkled with perplexity.

"I am a good pupil," she cried. "You see I am already learning to help myself. I made a bucket out of one of the dish covers by slinging it in two ropes. Another dish cover, some sand and leaves supplied basin, soap and towel. I have cleaned the tin cups and the knives, and, see, here is my greatest treasure."

She held up a small metal lamp.

"Where in the world did you find that?" he exclaimed.

Buried in the sand inside the cave."

"Anything else?"

His tone was abrupt. She was so disappointed by the seeming want of appreciation of her industry that a gleam of amusement died from her eyes, and she shook her head, stooping at once to attend to the toasting of some biscuits.

This time he was genuinely sorry.

"Forgive me, Miss Deane," he said penitently. "My words were dictated by anxiety. I do not wish you to make discoveries on your own account. This is a strange place, you know—an unpleasant one in some respects."

"Surely I can rummage about my own cave?"

"Most certainly. It was careless of me not to have examined its interior more thoroughly."

"Then why do you grumble because I found the lamp?"

"I did not mean any such thing. I am sorry."

"I think you are horrid. If you want to wash you will find the water over there. Don't wait. The ham will be frizzled to a cinder."

Shrinky Jenks! Was ever man fated to incur such unmerited odium? He savagely laved his face and neck. The fresh, cool water was delightful at first, but when he drew near to the fire he experienced an unaccountable sensation of weakness. Could it be possible that he was going to faint? It was too absurd. He sank to the ground. Trees, rocks and sand strewn earth indulged in a mad dance. Iris' voice sounded weak and indistinct. It seemed to travel he waved from a great distance. He tried to brush away from his brain these dim fancies, but his arm will for once failed, and he pitched headlong downward into darkness.

When he recovered, the girl's left arm was around his neck. For one blissful instant he nestled there contentedly. He looked into her eyes and saw that she was crying. A gust of anger swept within him that he should be the cause of these tears.

He tried to rise.

"Oh! Are you better?" Her lips quivered pitifully.

"Yes. What happened? Did I faint?"

"Drink this."

She held a cup to his mouth, and he obediently strove to swallow the contents. It was champagne. After the first spasm of terror and when the application of water to his face failed to restore consciousness Iris had opened one of the bottles of champagne.

His quickly revived. Nature had only given him a warning that he was overdrawing his resources. He was deeply humiliated. He did not conceive the truth, that only a strong man could do all that he had done. But, for thirty-six hours he had not slept. During part of the time he fought with wilder beasts than they knew at Ephesus. The long exposure to the sun, the mental strain of his beachcoding that the charming girl whose life depended upon him might be exposed to even worse dangers than any yet encountered, the physical labor he had undergone, the irksome restraint he strove to place upon his conduct and utterances—all these things culminated in utter prostration when the water touched his heated skin.

"How could you frighten me so?" demanded Iris hysterically: "You must have felt that you were working too hard. You made me rest. Why didn't you rest yourself?"

He looked at her wistfully. This cellipse must not happen again for her sake. These two said more with eyes than lips. She withdrew her arm. Her face and neck crimsoned.

"Good grandeur!" she cried. "The ham is ruined!"

It was burnt black. She prepared a fresh meal, however, and ready Jenks was himself again. They ate in silence and shared the remains of the bottle. A smile illumined his tired face.

Iris was watchful. She had never in her life cooked even a potato or boiled an egg. The ham was her first attempt.

"My cooking amuses you?" she demanded suspiciously.

"It requires very sense," he murmured. "There is but one thing needful to complete my happiness."

"And that is?"

"Permission to smoke."

"Smoke what?"

He produced a steel box tightly closed and a pipe.

"Your pipe and are absolute shops," said the girl, delighted that his temper had improved. "What other stores do you carry about with you?"

He lit his pipe and solemnly gave an inventory of his worldly goods. Beyond the items she had previously seen he could only enumerate a silver dollar, a very soiled and crumpled handkerchief and a bit of tin. A box of Norwegian matches he threw away as useless, but Iris recovered them.

"You never know what purpose they may serve," she said. In after days a similar significance was attached to this simple phrase.

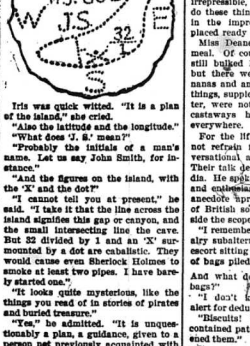
"Why do you carry about a bit of tin?" she went on.

"I found it here, Miss Deane," he answered.

Luckily she interpreted "here" as applying to the island.

"Let me see it. May I?"

He handed it to her. She could make nothing of it, so together they puzzled over it. The surface rubbed it with a mixture of kerosene and sand. Then figures and letters and a sort of diagram were revealed. At last they became decipherable. By exercising sufficient ingenuity some one had indented the metal with a sharp punch until the marks assumed this aspect:



Iris was quick witted. "It is a plan of the island," she cried.

"Also the latitude and the longitude." "What does 'J. S.' mean?"

"Probably the initials of a man's name. Let us say John Smith, for instance."

"And the figures on the island, with the 'X' and the dot?"

"I cannot tell you at present," he said. "I take it that the line across the island signifies this gap or canyon, and the small intersecting line the cave. The 'X' and the dot—I am an 'X' not mounted by a dot are caballistic. They would cause even Sherlock Holmes to smoke at least two pipes. I have barely started one."

"It looks quite mysterious, like the things you read of in stories of pirates and buried treasure."

"Yes," he admitted. "It is unquestionably a plan, a guidance, given to a person not previously acquainted with the island, but cognizant of some fact connected with it. Unfortunately one of the buccaneers I can bring to mind frequented these seas. The poor beggar who left it here must have had some other motive than searching for a cache."

"Did he dig the cave and the well, I wonder?"

Probably the former, but not the well. No man could do it unaided."

"Why do you assume he was alone?"

He strolled toward the fire to kick a stray log. There is only idle speculation at the best, Miss Deane," he said.

"Would you like to help me to drag some timber up from the beach? If we get a few more planks we can build a fire that will last for hours. We want some extra clothes, too, and it will soon be dark."

The request for co-operation gratified her. She complied eagerly, and without much exertion they hauled a respectable load of firewood to their new camping ground. They also brought a number of sticks to serve as cowrings. Then Jenks tackled the lamp. It was a most difficult operation to open it.

Before the sun went down he succeeded and made a wick by unravelling a few strands of wool from his jersey. When night fell, with the suddenness of the tropics, Iris was able to illuminate her domain.

They were both utterly tired and ready to sleep with fatigue. The girl said "good night" but hesitantly re-appeared from behind the screen.

"Am I to keep the lamp alight?" she inquired.

"Please yourself, Miss Deane. Better not, perhaps. It will only burn four or five hours anyway."

Soon the light vanished, and he lay down, his pipe between his teeth, close to the cave's entrance. Weary though he was he could not sleep forthwith. His mind was occupied with the signs on the outer head.

"32 divided by 1; an 'X' and a dot," he repeated several times. "What do they signify?"

Suddenly he sat up, with every sense alert, and grabbed his revolver. Something impelled him to look toward the spot, a few feet away, where the skeleton was hidden. It was the rustling of a bird among the trees that had caught his ear.

He thought of the white framework of a once powerful man, lying there among the bushes, abandoned, forgotten, horrific. Then he smothered a cry of surprise.

"By Jove!" he muttered. "There is no 'X' and dot. That sign is meant for a skull and crossbones. It lies exactly on the part of the island where we saw that queer looking bald patch today. First thing tomorrow before the girl awakes I must examine that place."

He resolutely stretched himself on his share of the spread out coats, now thoroughly dried by sun and fire. In a minute he was sound asleep.

CHAPTER V.

HE awoke to find the sun high in the heavens. Iris was preparing breakfast; a fine fire was crackling cheerfully, and the presiding goddess had so altered her appearance that the sailor surveyed her with astonishment.

He noiselessly assumed a sitting posture, tucked his feet beneath him and blinked. Then his face was not visible from where he sat, and for a few seconds he thought he must surely be dreaming. She was attired in a neat navy blue flannel smart blouse. Her white canvas shoes were replaced by strong leather boots. She was quite spick and span, this island Hebe.

So accurate had he slept that his senses returned but slowly. At last he guessed what had happened. She had risen with the dawn and, conquering her natural feeling of repulsion, selected from the store he accumulated yesterday some more suitable garments than those in which she escaped from the wreck.

He quietly took stock of his own tattered condition and passed a reflective moment in rubbing his chin. In a few days his face would resemble a scrubbing brush. In that contented moment he would have exchanged even his pipe and tobacco box, worth untold gold, for shaving tackle. Who can say why his thoughts took such trend? Seventy-four hours can effect great changes in the human mind if controlling influences are active.

Then came a sharp revulsion of feeling. His name was Robert—a menial. He reached for his boots, and Iris heard him.

"Good morning!" she cried, smiling sweetly. "I thought you would never awake. I suppose you were very, very tired. Please wash quickly. The eggs will be hard."

"Eggs!"

"Yes. I made a collection among the trees. I found one or two that looked good. It was first rate."

He had not the moral courage to begin the day with a rebuke. She was irrepressible. But she really must not do these things. He smothered a sigh in the improvised basin which was placed ready for him.

Miss Deane had prepared a capital meal. Of course the ham and biscuits still bulked large in the bill of fare, but there were boiled eggs, fried bananas and an elderly coconut. These things, supplemented by clear, cold water, were not so bad for a couple of castaways hundreds of miles from everywhere.

For the life of him the man could not refrain from displaying the conventional air in which he excelled. Their task dealt with Italy, Egypt, India. He spoke with the ease of culture and cosmopolitanism. Once he slipped into French and Italian. Then a lagged thin of British soldiers in any matter outside the scope of the king's regulations.

"I remember," he said, "seeing a cavalry subaltry and the members of an escort sitting half starved on a number of bags piled up in the Suakin desert.

And what do you think were in the bags?"

"I don't know," said Iris, keenly alert for deductions.

"Biscuits! They thought the bags contained patent fodder until I enlightened them."

It was on the tip of her tongue to pounce on him with the comment, "Then you have been an officer in the army." But she forbore. She had guessed this earlier. Yet the mischievous light in her eyes defied control. He was warned in time and pulled himself up short.

"You read my face like a book," she cried.

"No printed page was ever so—legible. Now, Miss Deane, we have gossiped too long. I am a lagged this morning, but before starting work I have a few serious remarks to make."

"More digs?" she inquired sauclily.

"I repudiate 'digs.' In the first place, you must not make any more experiments in the matter of food. The eggs were a wonderful effort; but, flattered by success, you may poison yourself."

"Secondly?"

"You must never pass out of my sight without carrying a revolver, not because I suspect, but as a signal. Did you take one when you went bird's nesting?"

"No. Why?"

There was a troubled look in his eyes when he answered:

"It is best to tell you at once that before help reaches us we may be visited by a fever and bloodthirsty savage. I would not even mention this if it were a remote contingency. As matters stand, you ought to know that such a thing may happen. Let us trust in God's goodness that assistance may come soon. The island has seemingly been deserted for many centuries, and there is no real danger of—" warn you lest you should be taken unawares."

Iris was serious enough now.

"How do you know that such danger threatens us?" she demanded.

He continued readily. "Because I happen to have read a good deal about the China sea and its frequenters," he said. "I am the last man in the world to alarm you needlessly. All I propose to convey is that certain precautions should be taken against a risk that is possible, not probable. No more."

She could not repress a shudder. The sailor wanted to tell her that he would defend her against a host of savages if he were endowed with many lives, but he was perforce tongued tied. He even reviled himself for having spoken, but she saw the anguish in his face, and her woman's heart acknowledged him as her protector, her shield.

"Mr. Jenks," she said simply, "we are in God's hands. I put my trust in him and in you. I am hopeful—nay, more, confident. I thank you for what you have done, for all that you will do. If you cannot preserve us from threatening perils no man could, for you are as brave and gallant a gentleman as lives on the earth today."

Now, the strange feature of this extraordinary and unexpected outburst of pent up emotion was that the girl pronounced his name with the slightly emphasized accentuation of one who knew it to be a mere disguise. The man was so taken aback by her declaration of faith that the mere incident, though it did not escape him, was smothered in a tumult of feeling.

He could not trust himself to speak. He rose hastily and utilized the ax to deliver a murderous assault upon a sago palm that stood close at hand.

Iris was the first to recover a degree of self possession. For a moment she had bared her soul. With reaction came a sensitive shrinking. Her delicate nature disapproved these sentimental displays. She wanted to box her own ears.

Will innate tact she took a keen interest in the felling of the tree.

"What do you want it for?" she inquired when the sturdy trunk creaked and fell.

Jenks felt better now.

"This is a change of diet," he explained. "No; we don't boil the leaves or nibble the bark. When I split this palm open you will find that the interior is full of pith. I will cut it out for you, and then it will be your task to knead it with water after well swelling it, pick out all the fiber and finally permit the water to evaporate. In a couple of days the residuum will become a white powder, which, when boiled, is sago."

"Good gracious!" said Iris.

"The story sounds unconvincing, but I believe I am correct. It is worth a trial."

"I should have imagined that sago grew on a tree like rice or wheat."

"Or Topsy?"

She laughed. A difficult situation had passed without undue effort. Unsuppliy for the sailor, he was while using a crowbar as a wedge he endeavored to put matters on a straightforward footing.

"A little while ago," he said, "you seemed to imply that I had assumed the name of Jenks."

But Miss Deane's confidential mood had gone. "Speaking of the kind," she said coldly. "I think Jenks is an excellent name."

She regretted the words even as they fell from her lips. The sailor gave a mighty wrench with the bar, splitting the log to its clustering leaves.

"You are right," he said. "It is distinctive, brief, dogmatic. I cling to it passionately."

Soon afterward, leaving Iris to the manufacture of sago, he went to the leeward side of the island, a search for turtles being his ostensible object. When the tree hid him he quickened his pace and turned to the left in order to explore the cavity marked on the tin with a skull and crossbones. To his surprise he found the remnants of a roadway—that is, a line through the wood where there were no well grown trees, where the ground bore traces of humanity in the shape of a wrinkled and mildewed pair of Chinese boots, a rusted knife, even the decayed remains of a pallet, or litter.

At last he reached the edge of the pit, and the sight that met his eyes held him spellbound.

The labor of many hands had torn a chasm, a quarry, in the side of the hill. Roughly circular in shape, it had a diameter of perhaps a hundred feet, and at its deepest part, toward the cliff, it ran to a depth of forty feet. On the lower side, where the sailor stood, it descended rapidly for some fifteen feet.

Grasses, siruba, plants of every variety, grew in profusion down the steep slopes wherever seeds could find precarious nurture until a point was reached about ten or eleven feet from the bottom. There all vegetation ceased, as if forbidden to cross a magic circle.

To be continued.

When in need of a good hair cutter or shave call on L. A. Scott at the Carter Hall House Barber shop. Only first-class workmen employed. A call solicited.

THE LAND OF TWINS.

Scotland is the land of twins and triplets, holding a long lead over her competitors in this line. There are twelve months no fewer than 1,622 children have been born, and twenty-five presented triplets. Scotland is the place, moreover, where they know the production of male babies in greater than of females. Striking an average, it is found that there are about 104 males to every 100 females, but the surplus of grown-up girls is nevertheless large, as so many men travel south, and apparently neglect to take precaution to obtain return tickets to the land of cakes. There is yet another interesting fact about Scotland. It is the land of baby old age. Recent returns show that during one year 673 people died between the ages of ninety and 100.

FAMOUS PEOPLE

JACOB GOULD SCHURMAN
The President of Cornell University

When Jacob Gould Schurman was a boy on his father's backwoods farm on Prince Edward Island, where he was born in 1854, educational advantages were scant in quality and costly in time and energy. Books were few, the one newspaper that connected the family with the outside world was but a provincial weekly, and the district school was taught by one teacher who gave the simple things of education, with no fancy dishes of the modern class.

When Jacob was thirteen he had to become self-supporting, and secured a clerkship of the general utility type in a country store at thirty dollars a year and his board and washing. In his second year he received sixty dollars, and at the end of the following year Jacob came a longing for a better education.

In two years he had saved eighty dollars and with this as a bulwark against starvation he attended the village high school, studied voraciously night and night and entered a competitive examination for a scholarship at Prince of Wales College at Charlottetown, on the island. He won the scholarship of sixty dollars and went to the college. Then after a year of teaching he went to Acadia College, where his appetite for prize-winning became insatiable. He won a scholarship of $500 a year for three years offered by the University of London, followed by his winning the traveling fellowship of the Hibbert Trust, worth three hundred pounds, scholarships and similar rewards, with predestined certainty and monotonous iteration.

He studied in London, Paris, Edinburgh, Berlin, Göttingen, and half a dozen other cities and took degrees in all of them. Any one of these degrees could supply but not nearly all he could absorb, he returned to Canada as professor in one of the colleges.

In 1885, Andrew D. White recommended him to Cornell, and the year following, at the age of thirty-two, he became head of the Department of Philosophy; in 1891 was made Dean of the Sage School of Philosophy, and in 1892 he received the degree of Doctor of Laws from Edinburgh University and became President of Cornell, being the only man even considered for a moment for the position.

Dr. Schurman is remarkable as a lecturer, broad and liberal as a teacher, searching for truth with his students rather than giving them his opinions as finalities; sincere and thorough as an investigator; clear, eloquent and effective as an orator; stimulating and direct as an author; and as a man, popular, magnetic, sympathetic, sterling and broad-gauge.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by W. C. Black, at the Department of Agriculture.

SELLS & DOWNS CIRCUS DIFFERENT.

The Great Sells & Downs United Show, which is advertised to appear in Napanee, on Thursday, 25th May, claims to be different from other shows and, judging from the great variety of features and attractions advertised, it will have no trouble to convince its patrons that it is very different from other tent shows. After due reflection, the editor-in-chief sentiment: "When you have seen one circus you have seen them all," expresses a truthful, One might as well say, "When you have read one novel you have read them all," or "When you have heard one lecture you have heard them all," or "When you have seen one pair you have seen them all," or, when you have heard one band you have heard them all," as to say "When you have seen one circus you have seen them all." A visit to the Sells & Downs Show will convince the most skeptical that such sentimental talk is foolish, without foundation, and upon investigation it resolves itself into an exaggerated absurdity. The Great Sells & Downs Shows have horses, and so have other shows, but the Sells & Downs Shows have the best horses in the world. Other shows have riders, but fantastic performers, riders, etc., but they are very different from those with the Sells & Downs Show. It pays higher salaries, and not only secures superior performers mentioned above, but it has many novel, new and mysterious acts that cannot be imitated by other people successfully. Most of his names and acts are copyrighted. The Sells & Downs Show are to be seen only with it shows.

Those people in the community who have all visited a circus during recent years because they supposed they were all alike will do well to visit the Sells & Downs Shows, and they will be most agreeably and pleasantly disappointed and they will be forced to admit that the Great Sells & Downs Shows are not similar to others in but very few minor points and that, as a whole, in quality, quantity and character it is far different from other tented concerns.

The Great Sells & Downs Shows will positively exhibit in one day only in Napanee, on Thursday, May 25th.

Dr. Hugo and His Medicine for Women

Most people have heard of Dr. Hugo, of Paris. He is a distinguished physician in diseases of women.

Thousands of wealthy women in Europe consult him annually and pay $50 for the consultation and prescription.

For forty years he has made the diseases of women a special study.

He probably knows to-day more about the needs of the female sex than any other living physician.

Many years ago he formed the opinion, that most of the diseases of women are due to a neglected, run-down condition, brought on either by worry, over-work or some neglected menstruation or other uterine disorder.

Since coming to this conclusion, he has given special study to the perfection of a compound remedy, that would cure practically all the ailments of women not beyond the reach of medicine.

To effect this, it was necessary to secure such a combination of ingredients, that the compound remedy would prove both a tonic, a regulator, and a specific cure for the ills of women.

The result of Dr. Hugo's study and experiments was a remedy that has acquired continental fame in Europe.

It is said there to have the almost a magical effect in restoring sick, tired, and run-down women to their former health and strength.

There is no alcohol to stimulate, nor opium to deaden the symptoms of disease. It is a purely vegetable compound.

The remedy combines not only the results of Dr. Hugo's forty years' experience as a specialist, but also the latest medical discoveries of all other skilled physicians of the world.

It contains ingredients of great value to women which can be obtained in no other remedy.

There is something in it to help every organ of the female system. It is unnecessary to know exactly the cause of the trouble. No matter where it is the remedy will hit the right spot.

There is something in it for the stomach to help indigestion, for the bowels to cure constipation, for the nervous system to tone up the nerves, for the liver and kidneys to make them active in carrying off impurities, and something for the whole system to stop all drains, allay inflammation and make women regular.

Knowing that there was no other such remedy for women in existence, and knowing its wonderful results in Europe, we purchased the right to manufacture and sell it on this continent in tablet form under the name of Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women.

The marvellous, and in some cases miraculous cures, it has already performed here, justify the high opinion concerning it of women-in Europe, and our positive declaration that it makes healthy women.

Young Doctor—Did you ever make a mistake in a diagnosis?

Old Doctor—Yes. A shabby old fellow came into my office one day, and after I told him he had only a stomach ache, and charged him $2, I found out he was rich enough to have had appendicitis.

A Boston splinter owns a dog. One of those high-bred "toweries." "That's so well bred and nice," he said, "he never puts—he "trowers."

It was the end of the term, and the schoolmaster was sending out to the parents the reports concerning the good and or indifferent conduct of their young hopefuls. On Johnny's report he scribbled, with an air of exceeding fury the words, "Johnny lacks a great deal too much," to which Johnny's father, a southern man, wrote the following delightfully laconic reply, "You should have his mother."

THE WINGS OF THE MORNING

BY LOUIS TRACY.

Below this belt the place was a charnel house. The bones of men and animals mingled in weird confusion. Most were mere skeletons. A few bodies—nine the sailor counted—yet preserved some resemblance of humanity. These latter were scattered among the older relics. They wore the clothes of Dyaks. Characteristic hats and weapons denoted their nationality. The others, the first harvest of this modern Golgotha, might have been Chinese coolies. When the sailor's fascinated vision could register details he distinguished yokes, baskets, odd looking spades and picks strewn amid the bones. The animals were all of one type—small, lanky, with long pointed skulls. At last he spied a withered hoof. They were pigs.

The place was a charnel house.

Over all lay a thick coating of fine sand, deposited from the eddying winds that could never reach the silent depths. The place was gruesome, horribly depressing. Jenks broke out into a clammy perspiration. He seemed to be looking at the secrets of the grave.

At last his superior intelligence asserted itself. His brain became clearer, recovered its power of analysis. He began to criticise, reflect, and this is the theory he evolved:

Some one, long ago, had discovered valuable minerals in the volcanic rock. Mining operations were in full blast when the extinct volcano took its revenge upon the human ants gnawing at its vitals and smothered them by a deadly outpouring of carbonic acid gas, the bottled up poison of the ages. A horde of pigs, running wild over the island—placed there no doubt by Chinese fishers—had met the same fate while intent on dreadful orgy.

Then there came a European who knew how the anhydrate gas, being heavier than the surrounding air, settled like water in that terrible hollow. He, too, had striven to wrest the treasure from the stone by driving a tunnel into the cliff. He had partly succeeded and had gone away, perhaps to obtain help, after crudely registering his knowledge on the half of a tin canister. This, again, probably fell into the hands of another man, who, curious but unconvinced, caused himself to be set ashore on this desolate spot with a few inadequate stores. Possibly he had arranged to be taken off within a fixed time.

But a sampan laden with Dyak pirates came first, and the intrepid explorer's bones rested near the well, while his head had gone to decorate the hut of some fierce village chief. The murderers, after burying their own dead—for the white man fought hard, witness the empty cartridges—searched the island. Some of them, ignorantly inquisitive, descended into the hollow. They encountered fire. The others, the heretofore barbarians, fled for their lives, embarking so hastily that they took from the cave neither tools nor oil, though they would greatly prize these articles.

Such was the tragic web he spun, a compound of fact and fancy. It explained all perplexities save one. What did "32 divided by 1" mean? Was there yet another fearsome riddle awaiting solution?

And then his thoughts flew to Iris. Happen what might, her bright picture

WILSON'S FLY PADS

PERIL IN THE HAND-SHAKE.

Not long ago Dr. J. N. Hirsch, of Chicago, said: "The most delicate perfume upon the hands is not a sign of freedom from germs, and the most refined are not free from disease of lungs or throat, and the germs are rapidly spread by touching the hand that has handled the handkerchief of one afflicted with a cold, catarrh or consumption. The breath one inhales from the lungs of another may contain germs of disease." You will not only be able to resist the germs of consumption, but many thousands of cases have been known where persons who were suffering from incipient phthisis, or the early stages of consumption were absolutely cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It makes a person's nutrition right by enabling him to eat, retain, digest and assimilate food. It overcomes the gastric irritability and symptoms of indigestion, and thus the patient is saved from those symptoms of fever, night-sweats, headache, etc., which are so common.

An alterative extract like Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, made of roots and herbs, without the use of alcohol, will assist the stomach in assimilating or taking up from the food such elements as are required for the blood, will assist the liver in throwing off the poisons in the system.

Do not permit some designing druggist to insult your intelligence by offering you a remedy which he claims is "just as good" —because he made it up himself, or ten chances to one you will get a medicine made up largely of alcohol, which will only weaken the system.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is heartily recommended by every person who has ever used it and it has stood the test of thirty-eight years of approval from people all over the United States.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets cure biliousness.

Iris had gone back to her ago kneading. Shouldering the ax, he walked to the beach. Much debris from the steamer was lying high and dry. It was an easy task for an athletic man to launch the palm tree, yet the sailor hesitated with almost imperceptible qualms.

"A batted rat trap," he muttered. Then he quickened his pace. With the first active spring from rock to rock his unacknowledged doubts vanished. He might find stores of priceless utility. The reflection inspired him. Jumping and climbing like a cat, in two minutes he was near the tree.

He could now see the tree explanation of its growth in a seemingly impossible place. Here the bed of the sea bulged upward in a small sand cay, which silted round the base of a limestone rock so different in color and formation from the coral reef. Nature, whose engineering contrivances can force springs to mountain tops, managed to deliver to this isolated retreat a sufficient supply of water to nourish the palm, and the roots, firmly lodged in deep crevices, were well protected from the waves.

Between the sailor and the tree intervened a small stretch of shallow water. Landward this submerged saddle shelved steeply into the lagoon. Although the water in the cove was twenty fathoms in depth, its crystal clearness was remarkable. The bottom, composed of marvellously white sand and broken coral, rendered other objects conspicuous. He could see plenty of fish, but not a single shark, while on the inner slope of the reef was plainly visible the destroyed fore part of the Sirdar, which had struck beyond the tree, really from the current standpoint. He had wondered why no boats were cast ashore. Now he saw the reason. Three of them were still fastened to the davits and carried down with the hull.

Seaward the water was not so clear. The waves created patches of foam, and long submerged weeds swayed gently in the undercurrent.

To reach Palm Tree rock—anticipating its subsequent name—he must cross a space of some thirty feet and wade up to his waist.

He made the passage with ease.

Pitched against the bole of the tree was a long, narrow case, very heavy, iron clamped and marked with letters in black triangles and the broad arrow of the British government.

"Rifles, by all the gods!" shouted the sailor.

The Sirdar carried a consignment of arms and ammunition from Hongkong to Singapore. Providence had decreed that a practically inexhaustible store of cartridges should be buried across the lagoon to the island. And here were rifles enough to equip half a company. He would not risk the precious ax in an attempt to open the case. He must go back for a crowbar.

What else was there in this storehouse thrust by Neptune from the ocean bed? A chest of tea, seemingly undamaged; three barrels of flour, utterly ruined; a saloon chair, smashed from its pivot; a hatchway companion. For the rest, fragments of timber interminglied with pulverised coral and broken crockery.

A little farther on the deep water entrance to the lagoon curved between sunken rocks. On one of them rested the Sirdar's huge funnel. The northwest section of the reef was bare. Among the wreckage he found a coil of stout rope and a pulley. He instantly conceived the idea of constructing an aerial line to ferry the chest of tea across the channel he had forded.

He threaded the pulley with the rope and climbed the tree, adding a touch of artistic completeness to the ruin of his trousers by the operation. He had fastened the pulley high up the trunk before he realized how much more simple it would be to break open the chest where it lay and transport its contents in small parcels.

He laughed slightly. "I am becoming addle headed," he said to himself. "Anyhow, now the job is done, I may as well make sure of it."

Recolling the rope ends, he cast them across to the reef. In such small ways do men throw invisible dice with death. With those two lines he could within a few fleeting seconds drag himself back from eternity.

Picking up the ax, he carelessly stepped into the water, not knowing that Iris, having welded the incipient sago into a flat pancake, had strolled to the beach and was watching him.

The water was hardly above his knees when there came a swirling rush from the seaweed. A long tentacle shot out like a lasso and gripped his right leg. Another coiled around his waist.

"My God!" he gurgled as a horrid sucker closed over his mouth and nose. He was in the grip of a devilfish!

A deadly sensation of nausea almost overpowered him, but the love of life came to his aid and he tore the suffocating feeler from his face. Then the ax whirled, and one of the eight arms of the octopus lost some of its length. Yet a fourth flung itself around his left ankle. A few feet away, out of range of the ax and lifting itself bodily out of the water, was the dread form of the cuttle, apparently all head, with distended gills and monstrous eyes.

The sailor's feet were planted wide apart. With frenzied effort he backed at the murderous tentacles, but the water hindered him, and he was forced to lean back in superhuman strain to avoid losing his balance. If once the terrible assailant got him down he knew he was lost. The very need to keep his feet prevented him from attempting to deal a second blow.

The cuttle was anchored by three of its tentacles. Its remaining arm darted with sinuous activity to again clutch the man's face or neck. With the ax he smote madly at the curling feeler, diverting its aim time and again, but failing to deliver an effective stroke.

With agonized prescience the sailor knew that he was yielding. Were the devilfish a giant of its tribe he could not have held out so long. As it was, the creature could afford to wait, strengthening its grasp, tightening its coils, pulling and pumping at its prey with remorseless certainty.

He was nearly spent. In a paroxysm of despair he resolved to give way and with one mad effort seek to bury the ax in the monster's head. Here he could execute this fatal project, for the cuttle would have instantly swept him into the trailing weeds, five revolver shots rang out in quick succession. Iris had reached the nearest rock.

The third bullet gave the octopus cause to reflect. It squirted forth a torrent of dark colored fluid. Instantly the water became black, opaque. The tentacle, flourishing in air, thrashed the surface with impotent fury. That around Jenks' waist grew taut and rigid. The ax flashed with the inspiration of hope. Another arm was severed. The huge dismembered coil slackened and fell away.

Yet was he anchored immovably. He turned to look at Iris. She never forgot the fleeting expression of his face. So might Lazarus have looked from the tomb.

"The rope!" she screamed, dropping the revolver and seizing the loose ends lying at her feet.

She drew them tight and leaned back, hauling with all her strength. The sailor flung the ax to the rocks and grasped the two ropes. He raised himself and plunged wildly. He was free. With two convulsive strides he was at the girl's side.

He stumbled to a bowlder and dropped in complete collapse. After a time he felt Iris' hand placed timidly on his shoulder. He raised his head and saw her eyes shining.

"Thank you," he said. "We are quits now."

CHAPTER VI.

FIERCE emotions are necessarily transient, but for the hour they exhaust the psychic capacity. The sailor had gone through such mental stress before it was yet noon that he was benumbed, wholly incapable of further sensation.

Being in good condition, he soon recovered his physical powers. He was outwardly little the worse for the encounter with the devilfish. The skin around his mouth was sore. His wrist and legs were bruised. One sweep of the ax had cut clean through the bulging leather of his left boot without touching the foot. In a word, he was practically uninjured.

He had the dogfike habit of shaking himself at the close of a fray. He did so now with startling effect. Iris showed clearer signs of the ordeal. Her face was drawn and haggard, the pupils of her eyes dilated. She was gazing into depths illimitable, unexplored. Compassion awoke at sight of her.

"Come," said Jenks gently. "Let us get back to the island."

He quietly resumed predominance, helping her over the rough pathway of the reef, almost lifting her when the difficulties were great.

He did not ask her how it happened that she came so speedily to his assistance. Enough that she had done it, during all for his sake. She was weak and trembling.

Reaching the firm sand, she could walk alone.

"Did—the thing—grip you?" she nervously inquired.

"All over at once, it felt like. The beast attacked me with five arms."

She shuddered. "I don't know how you could fight it," she said. "How strong, how brave, you must be!"

This amused him. "The veriest coward will try to save his own life," he answered. "If you use such adjectives to me, what words can I find to do justice to you, who dared to come close to such a vile looking creature and kill it. I must thank my stars that you carried the revolver."

"Ah!" she said. "That reminds me. You do not practice what you preach. I found your plaid lying on the stone in the cave. That is one reason why I followed you."

It was quite true. He laid the weapon aside when delving at the rock and forgot to replace it in his belt.

"It was stupid of me," he admitted, "but I am not sorry."

"Why?"

"Because, as it is, I owe you my life."

"You owe me nothing," she snapped. "It is very thoughtless of you to run such risks. What will become of me if anything happens to you? My point of view is purely selfish, you see."

"Quite so. Purely selfish." He smiled sadly. "Selfish people of your type are somewhat rare, Miss Denne."

She moved toward the cave, but he cried:

"Wait one minute. I want to get a couple of crowbars."

"What for?"

"I must go back there." He jerked his head in the direction of the reef. She uttered a little sob of dismay.

"I will incur no danger this time," he explained. "I found rifles there. We must have them; they may mean salvation."

When Iris was determined about anything her chin dimpled. It puckered dreadfully now.

"I will come with you," she announced.

Very well. I will wait for you. The tide will serve for another hour."

He knew he had decided rightly. She could not bear to be alone—yet. Even the revolver was secured, and they returned to the reef. Scrambling now with difficulty over the rough and dangerous track, Iris was secretly amazed by the resourcefulness and daring activity she displayed during her earlier passage along the same precarious roadway.

Then she darted from rock to rock with the fearless certainty of a chamois. Her only stumble was caused, she recollected, by an effort to avoid wetting her dress. She laughed nervously when they reached the place. This time Jenks lifted her across the intervening gap.

They were standing on the landward side of the shallow water in which he fought the octopus.

Already the dark fluid emitted by his assailant in the first discomfiture was passing away owing to the slight movement of the tide.

"Now that you have brought me here you have no difficulty, what are you going to do?" she said. "It will be madness for you to attempt to ford that passage again. Where there be one of those horrible things there are others, I suppose."

"That is one reason why I brought the crowbars," he explained. "If you will sit down for a little while I will have everything properly fixed."

He delved with one of the bars until it lodged in a crevice of the coral. Then a few powerful blows with the back of the ax wedged it firmly enough to bear any ordinary strain. The rope ends reeved through the pulley on the tree were lying where they fell from the girl's hand at the close of the struggle. He deftly knotted them to the rigid bar, and a few rapid turns of a piece of wreckage passed between the two lines strung them into a tautness that could not be attained by any amount of human effort.

Iris watched the operation in silence. The sailor always looked at his best when hard at work. The half sullen, wholly self contained expression of his face, which lit up with enthusiasm and concentrated intelligence. That which he essayed he did with all his might.

He, toiling with steady persistence, felt not the inward spur which sought relief in speech, but Iris was compelled to say something.

"I suppose," she commented with an air of much wisdom, "you are contriving an overhead railway for the safe transit of yourself and the goods?"

"Y-yes."

"Why are you so doubtful about it?"

Because I personally intended to walk across. The ropes will serve to convey the packages."

She rose imperiously. "I absolutely forbid you to enter the water again. Such a suggestion on your part is quite shameful. You are taking a grave risk for no very great gain that I can see, and if anything happens to you I shall be left all alone in this awful place."

She could think of no better argument. Her only resource was a woman's expedient—a plea for protection against threatening ills.

The matter seemed to be puzzled how best to act.

"Miss Deane," he said, "there is no such serious danger as you imagine. We have already slept and dined on mine. He will not do so again. Those rifles I must have. If it will serve to reassure you, I will go along the line myself."

Without another word he commenced operations. There was plenty of rope, and the plan he adopted was simplicity itself. When each package was securely fastened he attached it to a loop that passed over the line and stretched from the tree to the crowbar. To this loop he tied the lightest rope he could find and threw the other end to the girl. Pulling slightly she was able to land at her feet even the cumbrous rifle chest, for the traveling angle was so acute that the heavier the article the more readily it sought the lower level.

They toiled in silence until Jenks could lay hands on nothing more of value. Then, observing due care, he quickly passed the channel. For an instant the girl gazed affrightedly at the sea until the sailor stood at her side again.

The tide had turned. In a few minutes the reef would be partly submerged. To carry the case of rifles to the mainland was a manifestly impossible feat, so Jenks now did that which done earlier would have saved him some labor. He broke open the chest and found that the weapons were apparently in excellent order.

He snapped the locks and squinted down the barrels of half a dozen to test them. These he laid on one side. Then he rapidly constructed a small raft—four timbers, binding them roughly with rope, and to this argosy he fastened the box of tea, the barrels of flour, the broken saloon chair and other small articles which might be of use. He avoided any difficulty in launching the raft by building it close to the water's edge. When all was ready the rising tide floated it for him. He secured it to his longest rope and gave it a vigorous push off into the lagoon. Then he sliced four rifles across his shoulders, asked Iris to carry the remaining two in like manner and began to maneuver the raft landward.

"While you land the goods I will prepare dinner," announced the girl.

"Please be careful not to slip on the rocks," he said. "I am concerned about the rifles. If you fell you might damage them, and the incoming tide will so hopelessly rust those I leave behind that they will be useless."

I will preserve them at any cost, though with six in our possession there is a margin for accidents. However, to reassure you, I will go back quickly."

Before he cold protest she started off at a run, jumping lightly from rock to rock. Disregarding his shouts, she preserved until she stood safely on the sands. Then, saucily waving a farewell, she set off toward the cave.

Had she seen the look of fierce despair that settled upon Jenks' face as he turned to his task of guiding the raft ashore she might have wondered what it meant. In any other culinary triumph. The eggs were fried!

"I am seriously thinking of trying to bolt a ham," she stated gravely. "Have you any idea how long it takes to cook one properly?"

"A quarter of an hour for each pound."

"Admirable! But we can measure neither hams nor pounds."

I think we can do both. I will construct a balance of some kind. Then, with a hair string to one end and a rifle and cartridges to the other, I will tell you the weight of the ham to an ounce. To ascertain the time I have already determined to fashion a sundial. I can lengthen the requisite divisions with reasonable accuracy, and a little observation will enable us to correct any mistakes."

"You are really very clever, Mr. Jenks," said Iris, with childlike candor. "Have you spent several years of your life preparing for residence on a desert island?"

"Something of the sort. I have led a queer kind of existence, full of useless purposes. Fate has driven me into a corner where my bdds and ends of knowledge are actually valuable. Such accidents make me millionaires."

"Useless purposes!" she repeated. "I can hardly credit that. One uses such a phrase to describe fussy people, alive with foolish activity. Your worst enemy would not place you in such a category."

"My worst enemy made the phrase effective at one time," said Miss Denne.

"You mean that he ruined your career?"

"Well—er—yes. I suppose that describes the position with fair accuracy."

"Was he a very great scoundrel?"

"He was and is."

Jenks spoke with quiet bitterness. The girl's words had evoked a sudden flood of recollection. For the moments he had been so busy he had been trapped into speaking of himself, nor did he see the quiet content on Iris' face when she elicited the information that his chief foe was a man. A certain tremulous hesitancy in her manner when she next spoke might have warned him, but the hungry soul caught only the warm sympathy of her words, which fell like rain on parched soil.

"You are tired," she said. "Won't you smoke for a little while and talk to me?"

He produced his pipe and tobacco.

"That is a fine rate pipe," she declared. "My father always said that a straight stem, with the bowl at a right angle, was the correct shape. You evidently agree with him."

"Absolutely."

"You will like my father when you meet him. He is the very best man alive, I am sure."

"You two are great friends, then?"

"Great friends! He is the only friend I possess in the world."

"What! Is that quite accurate?"

"Oh, quite! Of course, Mr. Jenks, I can never forget how much I owe to you. I like you immensely, too, although you are so—so gruff to me at times. But—but—you see, my father and I have always been together. I have neither brother nor sister, not even a cousin. My dear mother died from some horrid fever when I was quite a little girl. My father is everything to me."

"Dear child!" he murmured, apparently uttering his thoughts aloud rather than addressing her directly. "So you find me gruff, eh?"

"A regular bear when you lecture me. But that is only occasionally. You can be very nice when you like, when you forget your past troubles. And pray, why do you call me a child?"

"Have I done so?"

"Not a moment ago. How old are you, Mr. Jenks? I am twenty—twenty last December."

"And I," he said, "will be twenty-eight in August."

"Good gracious!" she gasped. "I am very sorry, but I really thought you were forty at least."

"I look it, no doubt. Let me be equally candid and admit that you, too, show your age markedly."

She smiled nervously. "What a lot of trouble you must have had to—to—to give you those little wrinkles in the corners of your mouth and eyes," she said.

"Wrinkles! How terrible!"

"I don't know. I think they rather suit you. Besides, it was stupid of me to imagine you were so old. I suppose exposure to the sun creates wrinkles, and you must have lived much in the open air."

"Early rising and late going to bed are bad for the complexion," he declared solemnly.

"I often wonder how army officers manage to exist," she said. "They never seem to get enough sleep, in the east at any rate."

"So you assume I have been in the army?"

"I am quite sure of it."

"May I ask why?"

"Your manner, your voice, your quiet air of authority, the very way you walk, all betray you."

"Then," he said sadly, "I will not attempt to deny the fact. I held a commission in the Indian staff corps for nine years. It was a hobby of mine to make myself acquainted with the best means of victualing my men and keeping them in good health under the most unlikely conditions and in every kind of climate, especially under circumstances when ordinary stores were not available. With that object in view I made up every possible country in which my regiment might be engaged, learned the local names of common articles of food and ascertained particularly what provision nature made to sustain life. The study interested me. Once, during the Sudan campaign, it was really useful and procured me promotion."

"Tell me about it."

"During some operations in the desert it was necessary for my troop to follow up a small party of rebels mounted on camels, which, as you probably know, can go without water much longer than horses. We were almost within striking distance when our horses completely gave out, but I luckily noticed indications which showed that there was water beneath a portion of the sand and succeeded in finding a level. Half an hour's spade work proved that I was right. We took up the pursuit again and ran the quarry to earth, and I got my captain's C."

"Was there no fight?"

He paused an appreciable time before replying. Then he evidently broke up his mind to perform some disagreeable task. The watching girl could see the change in his face, the sharp transition from eager interest to angry resentment.

"Yes," he went on at last, "there was a fight. It was a rather stiff affair, because a troop of British cavalry which should have supported me had turned back owing to the wait of water already mentioned. But that did not affect the officer in charge of the Twenty-fourth lancers from being severely reprimanded."

"The Twenty-fourth lancers!" cried Iris. "Lord Ventnor's regiment!"

"Lord Ventnor was the officer in question."

Her face crimsoned. "Then you know him?" she said.

"I do."

"Is he your enemy?"

"Yes."

"And that is why you were so agitated that last day on the Sirdar, when poor Lady Ventnor asked me if I were engaged to him?"

"Yes."

To be continued.

HOW TO CARE FOR THE HAIR.

Mothers should teach their girls to care for their hair as early as possible. If a girl is coaxed into the habit of giving her locks a hundred strokes with a clean brush every morning and every evening and braiding them loosely for bed, the foundation for a future beautiful head of hair will be laid. Too many children are allowed to go to bed with their hair in a tousled condition, only to have it jerked and tangled hastily when school time comes around. Such a practice is disastrous to the nerves of a sensitive child and ruinous to the hair. Never allow one child to use another's hair brush.

Napanee's Greatest ...Store.

THE Robinson Co.

The Robinson Co. store is making new records of success. Now success is not merely the selling of goods; it is selling more goods with a lower percentage of compliments and adjustments.

We have an inspiration in such a business,—such a showing of public appreciation and confidence The outcome is a constantly bettering store.

Women's Shirt Waists

A GREAT SALE OF THEM.

We have planned for the greatest May Shirt Waist Bargain that we ever had. Result—that commencing to-morrow, Saturday, May 20th, and continuing Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday we will place on sale an immense purchase of Manufacturers Sample Shirt Waists. Owing to the extra discount we got on taking such a large quantity, the regular price would be about a third more than we will charge you. Several hundred of these waists are on display in window now, but for information of those out of town may say that the lot consists of waists made from White Muslin, Embroidery and Lace Trimmed, Colored and Black Silks, Linen Embroidered, Colored Lustres, Black Sateens and Muslins, Fancy Zephyrs, Ginghams, Percales, Japanese Silks, etc. To be able to give you such a Shirt Waist Bargain so early in the season is very unusual and it will pay you well to stock up for summer. Now these samples are nearly all size 36, the size that fits more people than any other. To further spice this sale we will include a lot of broken lines and odd sizes from our regular stock, making range of sizes from 32 to 42 complete.

A Mammoth Sale of Colored Taffeta Silks, Thursday, June 1st.

Here's the aristocratic bargain of the season. We will not give you full particulars of this Silk Sale until next week's paper. We have good business reasons for not giving all the information now. What we do say and what we wish to impress on your mind firmly is the fact that this is a genuine Robinson Co. Bargain. You can run your expectations high with assurance from us that you will not be disappointed. Taffeta Silks are as staple as stamps—a mat er. Really but little reason for their dipping in price, but occasionally a trade h ppening brings the chance to pay less than regular and we take advantage of it and so shou d you.

If you have any small rooms that need covering —five dollars will go a long way among these ends. That is just a hint. Come and see for yourself.

Men's Clothing - New - Correct.

The man who would rather be right than be Premier would find analogous lines of thought dominating this clothing store. OUR CHEESE IN ENGLAND.

Enterprise, May 17th, 1905.

To Editor of Napanee Beaver:

Dear Sir—On November 1st, 1904, I wrote a note which I put in a bottle and enclosed in a cheese from this factory, in which I told where the cheese was manufactured, also the date and the makers, and asked whoever received the cheese to kindly inform me who received it and in what condition it arrived and where, and I would be pleased to answer, and to which I have received the enclosed reply.

J. C. WILSON.

306 Watery Lane, Sutton, W. St. Helens Lane, England, 27th April, 1905.

Sir—I opened a box of cheese to-day, manufactured by the Enterprise and Mountain, which was loaded at the Bay of Quinte Railway station on Nov. 1st, 1904, in which I found a bottle and a letter inside. I must say that this cheese is being received in grand order, and is a splendid cheese. I have bought cheese now for sixteen years from the same party, and my father has bought it for twenty years previous to my starting business.

Yours respectfully,

DANIEL CLARKE, Grocer.

TAMWORTH.

REID—PRESLEY.

A very pretty marriage was celebrated at the residence of Mr. Robt. Reid, on April 12th, when Miss Agnes, his youngest daughter, was united in marriage to M. H. Presley, of Northbrook. The bride looked charming in cream mohair trimmed with applique and lace, as she came forward on her father's arm to where the Rev. J. K. Henry, B.A., was waiting to tie the nuptial knot. They were unattended, and the ceremony was witnessed by only a few friends. After the ceremony the guests sat down to a very sumptuous lunch, after which the happy couple left on the four o'clock train for Western cities. The presents were numerous and costly, showing the esteem in which the bride was held. This vicinity loses one of its most popular young ladies in the person of the bride. The bride's going away gown was brown venetian jacket and skirt with white silk blouse. After their return they took up housekeeping at the residence of the bridegroom's father, where many good wishes for their future happiness has followed them.

Detective Captain—How did you manage to spot the thief through his woman disguise?

Detective—I saw him sit down and notice that he gave his shirt a hitch with both hands, as if to keep it from pulling at the knees. Then I grabbed him.

The following reply has been sent him from Buckingham Palace, "In reply to your letter I beg to inform you that the sovereign of this country has no politics, and that he looks upon conservatives, liberal, wrote at as being equally loyal to the crown, the constitution and the empire.

THE WHEEL OF FORTUNE

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS AND CAUSES OF FAILURE.

HALF BUILT TOWERS OF LIFE

The Talented Divine Draws New Illustrations and Up-to-Date Applications From the Text: "This Man Began to Build and Was Not Able to Finish"—Character, Perseverance and Grit the Great Essentials For Success.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dixey, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, at Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., May 14.—That the secret of success and the causes of failure, moral and material, lie in the foundations of character is shown in this sermon. The text is Luke xiv, 20, "This man began to build and was not able to finish."

"What is the matter with yonder block of houses?" I asked one of my church officers some time ago when walking along the Chicago streets. "I came to the city at least four years ago. Then the walls were up. The floors in many of the houses were laid. The buildings seemed almost ready for the plasterers. Why this vast amount of money lying idle? It must be worth at least $150,000 a year as interest. It would have been far better to have laid no foundation and erected no walls at all, rather than to be turned into a vegetable garden than to leave those buildings in that state. I know every one of them by friend, "but the owner of those buildings overreached himself. When the building were half completed his money ran out. Then, on account of his debt, all his properties were thrown by litigation into the city courts. Now no one will touch them. Some of the

HOW TO AVOID, GERM DISEASES

STRENGTHEN THE STOMACH AND DIGESTION, AND YOU WILL KEEP WELL.

When there is an epidemic germ disease, and most diseases are caused by germs, it is the person with a weak stomach who succumbs first.

People with healthy digestion are ordinarily not subject to sickness, and can throw off readily any disease germs that enter the system.

Strengthen the stomach and digestive organs with a Mi-o-na tablet before each meal, and every atom of food taken into the stomach will be digested and assimilated, and the whole digestive system made so healthy, clean and sweet that ther will be no chance for disease germs to breed.

If you suffer with pains or distress after eating, headache, belching of gases, sour food, a bad taste in the mouth, dizziness, pains in the heart, specks before the eyes, and a general feeling of despondency and weakness, you should get well at once by strengthening the stomach with Mi-o-na. Just one small tablet out of a fifty cent box before eating, and your digestive system will become so strong that you will be the embodiment of good health and spirits, and need fear no germ diseases.

Ask T. B. Wallace to show you the guarantee under which he sells Mi-o-na; it costs nothing unless it cures.

The Critic in the Back.—"One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," but it only proves that the author sings the praises of humanism and touch of common interest, which is so common to touch, for it renders no poetry of the delights of delightful life miserable, even an application for relief when an application for relief is received by the grace of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, pain away. There is nothing equals it.

BABY'S BATTLES.

"Baby's Battles" is the title of a valuable little book on the care of infants and young children, published by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., which will be sent post free to any mother who asks for it. It tells you also something about Baby's Own Tablets, a medicine that cures all the minor ailments of infants and children, and is—a medicine praised by every mother who has used it. Mrs. Richard Smiley, Leonard, Ont., says: "We had a very sick baby in our house until we got Baby's Own Tablets. They were the first thing that did her any good, and I think they are a means of saving our little one's life. I praise them to all mothers." All medicine dealers sell these Tablets, or they can get them for you if you write box by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

DEFECTIVE EYESIGHT AND HEARING.

Writing in the Juse Delineator on the care of the eyes and ears, Dr. Arthur Frelghan Murray says, "Many children have imperfect vision and suffer from it long before their parents are aware of it. These are some of the indications which should lead one to suspect trouble. The eyes are red and inflamed most of the time, and water occur frequently. Children who need glasses squint and peer, or else hold the book or an object close under their noses or far off at arm's length, or they may face the light or have a drawn and anxious look. They may be unable to read the blackboard. All such children should have a careful examination of the eyes, and be fitted with the kind of glasses that are necessary to preserve their vision. Many children that have the appearance of being backward and stupid are not so in reality, but seem to be because of their imperfect sight or hearing."

Elsewhere, in the same article, we read in regard to the ears, that: "Earache in a child calls for prompt and effective attention, for, since it may be due to boils and abscesses or other inflammation, it may arise to chronic middle-ear trouble. The treatment is to apply warmth externally to the soft bones back of the ear, and what is called a mastoid abscess will form, which, if it breaks into the brain, may prove fatal; so in case of earache and inflammations always look out for the swelling which comes back of the ear, and call in the physician in time to prevent disaster. Children who seem stupid and do not answer readily when spoken to often have imperfect hearing. This should be kept in mind and tests applied to discover if such is the case."

THORNTON & WEIGHILL.

Carlyle, Emerson and Satan.

Carlyle and Emerson once had a passage of arms on the subject of the existence of the devil. Carlyle believed in the devil. He had a robust and defiant faith in such a personage, and we know that when Carlyle had a belief in anything it was so even if it wasn't so. The great American writer did not believe. They argued the thing for some time. "Well, come and see him for yourself," said Carlyle, and the poor poet, wondering whether the elder had the devil chained up anywhere, put on his hat and went out into the London night. Carlyle took him round to various gin shops in Seven Dials, to certain dens of infamy and low class music halls. "Do you believe in the devil now?" said Carlyle. Apparently Emerson did not. They finished up by going to the Distinguished Strangers' gallery of the house of commons. It was a wild night of impassioned speeches, sawing of arms and thumping of fists. Emerson had never seen anything like it and at last Carlyle nudged his elbow into Emerson's ribs and whispered gravely, "Do you believe in a devil now?"

Diplomatic Gun Play.

The Coffeyville (Kan.) Journal tells a story of the quick wit of a western gun artist: Bob Chestnut had an altercation with an Irishman in a western cattle camp many years ago. The Irishman was a bully and a bad man. While Chestnut always wore a brace of six shooters in his belt, he also carried a sudden emergency Derringer in his outside coat pocket. The Irishman had an eleven inch Colt already in his hand. Bob thrust his hand in his pocket for his Derringer, but the weapon had slipped down in a hole in the lining. His hand coming in contact with his pipe, he quickly drew it out and placed it in his mouth. The Irishman lowered his gun, which he had elevated when Bob thrust his hand into his pocket. Bob reached for his pocket again, presumably for his tobacco. Fumbling around, he secured the Derringer, brought it into play like a flash of lightning, and they carried the Irishman away.

As to Ladies and Gentlemen.

"It's a fine thing to be a lady, or a gentleman," said the bookkeeper.

"What's your idea of a gentleman?" inquired the stenographer.

"A man that's clean inside and out; who neither looks up to the rich nor down on the poor; who can lose with out squealing and who can win without bragging; who is considerate of women, children and old people; who is too brave to lie, too generous to tell and who takes his share of the world and lets other people have theirs."

"And what does it take to make a lady?" asked the stenographer.

"A perfect lady is a woman who can hear a choice piece of scandal about her dearest friend and then forget it," answered the bookkeeper.

"Huh!" cried the stenographer. "That kind of a woman wouldn't be a lady, she'd be in an asylum for the dumb."

Plants That Simulate Stones.

In South Africa a plant of the genus mesembryanthemum, growing on stony ground, so closely resembles a pebble that it has been picked by mistake for a stone. Another species of the same plant, growing on the hills around the Karru, produces two leaves about an inch in diameter, having a surface resembling weathered stone of a brownish gray color tinged with green. These plants look like stones, but the quartz pebbles among which it grows.—Youth's Companion.

Clean Monday.

We have in Great Britain our Good Friday, but Clean Monday is peculiarly a Grecian institution. It is the day that ushers in the great Lenten fast at Athens, and the people go holiday making to eat Lenten fare on the hills around the city, while the shepherds and country people dance the ancient Greek dances in the old temples. This practice is termed "cutting the nose of Lent," and obviously Clean Monday is parallel to our Shrove Tuesday and its pancakes.—London Telegraph.

Raising the Hat.

The polite custom of raising the hat to a lady dates back to the days of chivalry, when knights never appeared in public except in armor. On entering the house of a friend, however, or a room in which there were ladies, it became the custom for a knight to remove his helmet as a sign that, being in the presence of friends, he was safe from attack.

Wifely Solicitude.

"Doctor, my husband is dreadfully troubled with sleeplessness. What is good for it?"

"You might try reading him to sleep, madam."

"What would be the use of that, doctor? I try to talk him to sleep every night, and it doesn't do a bit of good."

A Prescription.

Nine Nations

Now Use Liquozone. Won't You Try It—Free?

Millions of people, of nine different nations, are constant users of Liquozone. Some are using it to get well; some to keep well. Some to avoid germ diseases; some as a tonic. No medicine was ever so widely employed. These users are everywhere—your neighbors and friends are among them. And half the people you meet—wherever you are—have the same-age whom Liquozone has cured.

If you need help, please ask some of these users what Liquozone does. Don't blindly take medicine for what medicine cannot do. Don't dose for germs. For your own sake, ask about Liquozone; then let us buy you a full-size bottle to try.

We Paid $100,000

For the American rights to Liquozone. We did this after testing the product for two years, through physicians and hospitals, after proving, in thousands of different cases, that Liquozone destroys the cause of any germ disease.

Liquozone has, for more than 20 years, been the constant subject of scientific and chemical research. It is not made by compounding drugs, or with alcohol. Its virtues are derived solely from gas—largely oxygen gas—by a process requiring many weeks and 14 days' time. The result is a liquid that does what oxygen does. It is a nerve food and blood food—the most helpful thing in the world to you. Its effects are exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying. Yet it is a germicide so certain that we publish on every bottle an offer of $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. The reason is that germs are vegetables; and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen—is deadly to vegetal matter.

There lies the great value of Liquozone. It is the only way known to kill germs in the body without killing the tissue, too. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Every physician knows that medicine is almost helpless in any germ disease.

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone attacks the germs, wherever they are. And when the germs which cause a disease are destroyed, the disease must end, and forever. That is inevitable.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

R. W. Woodcock, Evergreen City, Fla., has written the manufacturers that much better results are obtained from the use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in cases of Spasm in the bowels, colic and cholera morbus by taking it in water as hot as can be drank. This when taken in this way the effect is double and rapidly. "It seems to get at the right spot instantly," he says. For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 18d

THE COILING WORM OF THE APPLE.

By Prof. Lochhead.

The coddling moth is the cause of greater loss to the apple industry than any other insect. The extent of the loss to Ontario alone runs up every year into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, and into the millions in the United States, and because the remedy has which have been discovered by the entomologists have not been applied by the apple-growers.

While there is but one brood of the Codling Moth east and north of Toronto, there are two broods over all that district in the Niagara Peach. The different stages of this insect pest should be familiar to the apple grower, for only with this knowledge can he apply his remedies intelligently and early. The moths may be stated concisely as follows: The insect emerges from the pupa or chrysalis state in the cocoon in some protected place, and early flower time the blossoms are falling from the apples the moths are flying about. The female makes deposit their eggs on the leaves and fruit of the tree. It should be said that the caterpillars escape from the eggs and feed at first on the leaves, then on apples, usually at the calyx end. The caterpillar remains inside the apple about 20 days, after which it comes out to spin its cocoon within a shelter of some sort. In spring there is but one brood, but only about two weeks if the cocoon is left undisturbed. The second brood of moths appears about the middle of July, the beginning of August, then eggs are again deposited, and the caterpillars hatch from these eggs enter the developed apples about the middle of August, and pupate again in September to make cocoons for the winter. The worm with Paris Green or some other arsenic mixture when they enter the fruit. The trees should be sprayed: (1) a few days after the blossoms fall; (2) about the middle of August for the second brood of larvae. An additional spray in July may be given for the first will, in most cases, be productive of much good. It is advisable, of course, to use the arsenic mixture along with the fungicide, as the latter is a good fungus at the same time that the Codling Moth is being treated. For the second two additional sprayings are necessary, one before blossoming and one in July.

Bordeaux—Paris Green mixture is prepares according to the following formula:

Copper sulphate or blue stone, 4 pounds
Fresh Lime	4 pounds
Water	40 gallons
Paris Green	4 to 6 ounces

Dissolve the copper sulphate in 20 to 20 gallons of water in a barrel, and in another barrel the lime in water, carefully and 10 to 15 gallons of water are added to make a paste of lime. Then the contents of the two barrels are poured into a third barrel or through a strainer. Finally the Paris Green is made into a paste with water and put into the barrel, along with the Bordeaux. It is very necessary that the Paris Green be added while pumping is going on so as to keep the Paris Green well distributed throughout the mixture. Use a good spray pump and keep the mixture well fully at the times mentioned above. The cost of labor and material is commendable, but everything taken into account it is a profitable line of spraying, and is moreover, actually harmful to the trees are examined and the larvae destroyed, even in days or two larvae cannot do much harm at this time, and all of July.

Every fruit grower should acknowledge the value of such birds as the Chickadee, Downy Woodpecker, Nuthatch, Tree Swallows. When and Song Sparrows, in checking the ravages of the Codling Moth and other injurious insects, for without them fruit could not be grown. Encourage these birds, therefore, to come about the orchards by providing food in abundance, and by punishing the robber of birds' nests.

Nature has just one pigment on her palette with which she paints all the marvelous tints of beauty, and that one pigment is the blood. The spell-like pink beneath the finger nail, the delicate rose of the cheek, the cherry pigment of the lips, the soft translucent radiance of the eyes are all produced by the blood. Just as the permanence of a beautiful painting will depend upon the quality with which the colors are mixed, so the permanence of beauty depends upon the purity of the blood. Paint, powder and cosmetics don't avail to preserve beauty. Beauty begins in the blood. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a true beautifier, because it provides for nature the blood with which alone she can paint. The use of this medicine will cleanse the blood of all impurities, brighten the eyes, and give to the face and form that radiance of health which is the true charm of beauty. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are very effective in ridding the system of clogging, sluggish, which accumulates with constipated habit.

MY FRIEND, THE ENEMY.

Theatre-goers will have an opportunity to laugh continuously when the comedy, "My Friend, the Enemy," is presented at the Grand Opera House, Kingston, on Victoria Day, May 24th, matinee and night. The sunshine and reviving gayety of this comedy gem is said to be of that rare order, affording unusual enjoyment without offending anyone's sense of propriety. A comedy in reality abounding in bright, crisp dialogue, immensely funny situations and intricate entanglements, sure to reach the heavy good will of the auditor, and banish a frown from the most serious contenance. In fact, it is calculated to find the laughter chords in one's anatomy, and hold sway there, throughout the entire evening. If you know of a genuine Simon-pure case of the blues in need of a remedy, be sure "My Friend, the Enemy" is the proper doctor, in fact a "cure all" for all.

MILDRED HOLLAND.

The determination of a person to accomplish results measures the ratio of success achieved by the individual. This is evidenced particularly in the case of Mildred Holland, the brilliant and accomplished emotional actress, who will portray the role of Catherine the Great of Russia, in her latest success, "The Triumph of an Empress," at the Grand Opera House, Kingston, on Monday, May 22nd. Miss Holland's career has been marked by strenuous effort and conscientious endeavor to do at all times the best that in her lies. Her creation of Catherine is a performance replete with bright touches of genius and polished by a careful study, all phases of that great woman's private and public life.

DESMOND.

Death has once again claimed for its own one of our number, in the person of the late Mrs. Jacob Macdonald, sr. She had been in poor health during the past winter and was gradually failing until two weeks before her death, from which time she sank rapidly till called in peace to her eternal rest on Saturday afternoon, May 13th, in her eighty-sixth year. Her maiden name was Sarah Dowdle. She was born on Nov. 19th, 1819, in Wicklow Co., Ireland, and when twelve years of age moved with her parents to Canada and settled near Camden East, where the rest of her life was spent. In 1837 she was married to Jacob Macdonald, who predeceased her twenty-nine years ago. Out of a family of twelve, six children survive, three daughters, Mrs. R. Wilkes, Los Gatos, Cal.; Mrs. N. Wylie and Mrs. G. George, Carman City, Nevada, and three sons, Alex., of Sheburne, Dufferin Co., Robert James, of Camden East, and John, of Wilton; also a brother, Edward Dowdle, of Hinch, and a sister, Mrs. R. Reid, of Enterprise. The funeral services were held in the Camden East Methodist church and were largely attended by a large circle of friends and neighbors. Rev. Mr. Allin, of Enterprise, preached a very impressive and instructive sermon from 1 Kings, 10th chapter and 7th verse, "And behold the half was not told me," after which the remains were interred in the Methodist cemetery. Deceased was a member of the Methodist church, which she joined some sixty-six years ago. She could relate many incidents of the life of the early settlers with their hardships and privations, and also of old-time worship in barns and school houses.

We are glad to see all the vacant houses on the corner occupied. Mr. Edward Dowdle having moved into Mr. J. Carscallen's house, and Mr. York in Miss Irvine's house.

THE OTHER SIDE.

Kingston Whig.

Paris, Ont., has one of the best, most complete and most compact electric plants. The building is in the centre of the town, and it is occupied with a splendid plant, which is run by either steam or water. So far this year, and since March, the water wheels have been driving the machinery.

Two thousand incandescent and twenty-seven street lamps are lighted by means of two dynamos, both of which are very fine machines. The two boilers are 150 and 100 horse-power respectively, and the two engines are eighty horse-power and 175 horse power. The latter is heated by the Webster vacuum system from the exhaust.

The regrettable feature of the whole thing is that the power house has proved a white elephant on the town's hands. Last year, so those financing the concern say, the earnings of the plant were $1,500 over actual expenditures, but this amount falls short of paying debentures on the building and machinery. This year receipts fell $500 short of total cost of maintenance in the first quarter. Buildings, plant, and all, at the first place, cost the town in the neighborhood of $40,000, the plant itself costing about $14,000.

The gross receipts were $5,450; the operating expenses, $2,897.27; interest at four per cent., $1,959.61; depreciation, at five per cent., $2,449.51, and loss of taxes, $500. The deficit for 1904 was $2,456.09.

LILLIAN NORDICA

The Struggles and Triumphs of a Famous Singer

The success of Lillian Nordica, one of the greatest contemporary opera singers, is a tribute to the ambition and struggles of two women—the singer and her mother.

The youngest of six daughters of Edwin Norton, Lillian was born in Farmingham, Maine, in 1859, in a family where music was the atmosphere of the home. Her father was a violinist and her mother a singer with an unusually sweet, rich voice. Mrs. Norton's ambitions chafed at the limitations of village life; she wanted broader opportunities for the development of her children, so when Lillian was six the family made its gladsome exodus from Maine to Boston, the Mecca of her dreams.

The future prima donna early revealed the promise of her wonderful voice, and the mother of the transplanted family laid aside money from her boarding-house for the musical instruction of her daughter. From twelve to fifteen Lillian studied at the Boston Conservatory, with Prof. John O'Neill, who condensed the five years' course into three. When her interest flagged in the slightest she was stimulated to new energy by her mother, who learned her daughter's parts in order to teach her, worked untiringly and saved lovingly for the new goal of instruction.

Lillian was growing in power and courage. She was making $1,000 a year as a church singer, but singing in church did not satisfy her high ideals. She graduated from the Conservatory and by her beauty, her grace and her persistence, forced the great singer to listen to her rendering of Leonora's aria in "Il Trovatore." Tietjens was charmed, nobly captivated, and became her friend. She advised her to go to New York to study with Maretzek. The devoted mother was equal to this new emergency; she met the occasion with her customary high finance; saved, borrowed and otherwise secured enough money for a two years' stay in the metropolis, where she watched tenderly over her beloved daughter.

On completing the two years, when funds were ebbing and hopes bowing, Gilmore heard the singer and engaged her for a hundred concerts in Europe. In 1878 came the début at the Trocadero in Paris, followed by a term at Milan, where San Giovanni, an enthusiastic admirer of the singer, rechristened her "Giglio Nordica," the Lily of the North. At Brescia, where her success was overwhelming, her mother fainted through joy at hearing unending plaudits of the enthusiastic audience.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by W. C. Mack, at the Department of Agriculture.

Judge Teetzel answers in the affirmative. He finds that recent legislation has altered the wording of the Mortmain Acts, and the gift is good and may go to the church.

The housefly is, of itself, a great disseminator of disease, partaking and polluting as it does the food and drink of man. The latter seems well nigh impossible, but one of the two must be done. The mosquito carries malaria and yellow fever; the rat carries the plague; the fly, itself a great hydrophobe, the hog, trichina; the sheep, cattle and horses, anthrax and glanders; and they all carry tuberculosis.

DIED AT CLINTON, N.Y.

She Was a Former Resident of Bath, Ont.

Clinton, N.Y., Courier.

Mrs. Charlotte S. Rogers died on Saturday, May 13th, at the residence of Mrs. W. M. Carpenter, on Utica street, aged sixty-three years. She was stricken with paralysis on Wednesday night, but was conscious to the last and died very peacefully. Her only child, Mrs. Kingsley Chenery, was with her at the last, having come on to take her mother home from Chicago. All preparations for the journey had been made and they were intending to leave on Thursday morning. Mrs. Rogers was a daughter of Richard Gridley and was born at Bath, Ont., where she was married nearly forty years ago. After his death she came here to live with her daughter in Rome for a few years, and then came to Clinton to reside. She was a woman possessed of many admirable traits of mind and heart and was generally beloved and esteemed by all who knew her. She was quite an accomplished musician and gave instruction on the piano to a number of young pupils during her stay in Clinton. She was a regular attendant of the Methodist church and was president of the Ladies' Aid Society. Her funeral, on Tuesday afternoon, was held in the church. Interment at Rome.

A SAD TRAGEDY.

A tragedy, so sad in every phase that one's heart bleeds to contemplate it, followed upon the disappearance of the little infant son of Mr. and Mrs. William Martin from the front of Eaton's store, Toronto, on Friday afternoon. Here are the outlines in brief. Mrs. Murray went into the store to buy her little nine-months old boy a go-cart in the lane where dozens of children may sometimes be seen. A child attracted the attention of Josephine Carr, a pretty little girl of the street arab type, thirteen years old, who had apparently contracted the habit of stealing empty children's carriages. The following incident overcame her, and she stole the carriage with the child. Getting near home she became afraid of the consequences of her act, and Detective Caniaurene's lynx eyes instantly threw the baby down a deep railway embankment and killed it. Then she says she hid the body of the little one, but in a fit of terror dropping of its clothes so that it might not be recognized.

There was a Eugene Aram-like consciousness in the girl's mind on Saturday morning she went back with her sister to the scene to see the baneful work of her hands. She took the little naked body and, fain to do the embankment and went off to tell the police that she had found a dead child. Then the ingenious were the lies she told to shield herself. She invented a dark woman, and clothed her even to the smallest details. She made up a conversation with the woman, and how she saw the unknown wheeling a baby in the direction of the place where the body was found. Not by the poverty of her two feet great faculty of imagination was the girl at last suspected and induced to confess. She told a quite quite unexampled in the criminal annals of the Province. Whether the crime is murder, but we do not have little girls of her age. She will, no doubt be safely held either until by the apparent signs of insanity developed or until she recalls the death of the Murray baby to be a bad dream from which she has awakened.

The girl has made a practice of stealing empty go-carts left outside the departments stores by careless mothers. On the day she took the little naked body and left it to the embankment and went off to tell the police that she had found a dead child. On Friday there were no empty ones, but the baby tempted her. She took the best one, took the cart and baby in a different car to the other end of the city and threw the child over an 80-foot embankment, killing it instantly.

Then she scorned the body in a culvert, intending to sell the go-cart when opportunity offered. Josephine says the idea of kidnapping the child came to her as a result of witnessing the play "Kidnaped in New York," played at a local theatre during the week, and seeing some of the play bills posted.

From the evidence given at the inquest by Dr. John Cameron it is evident that after throwing the baby down the 88-foot embankment Josie Carr went down and deliberately struck the dying infant and then placed the body in the culvert. Dr. Cameron says the cause of death was a depressed fracture of the skull, the Forrosine; it is the atom-ach by supplying the blood with iron, vitalizes the nerves and brain instantly. Ferrozone conquers pale faces—makes you spirits. No such health bringer known. Fifty cents per box. Of drug Chocolate coated tablets at all dealers.

ELECTRICITY.

As a Purifying Agent for Food Products.

How modern science is utilising nature's powerful agent to purify, sterilize and improve our food

We have been so accustomed in the past to hearing almost weekly of some new and marvellous development in the field of electrical science, that we are not greatly surprised at any new mechanical application of electricity or the wireless telegraph, the telephone, electric motor and the marvellous X Ray.

Many of the wonderful inventions of Edison and others are now past history and accepted facts, but scientists have been busy experimenting with the electric current for other than mechanical purposes, applying it in the great arts of medicine as well as in the arts, science and many manufactures.

The latest bud to bloom on the tree of important application of the electric current is for the purification and sterilization of various food products.

Experiments along these lines have been carried on for some years past, but the recent discovery of the method of the electrical current for the purification and sterilization of flour, has attracted wide-spread attention, as the results in rationally treating such a staple commodity as flour, is indeed a boon.

It was generally considered, that with the improved machinery now employed in thoroughly up-to-date mills, that the milling of flour had practically reached perfection; and in so far as the handling of the flour during the process of manufacture is concerned, this is undoubtedly true; but the discovery of the electrical process means at least a step to greatly improve the finished product.

The new process is extremely interesting in brief. It consists in purifying by passing it through a tremendous electrical flame, the action of which flame upon the air being something in the nature of the action of lightning in the air; the flour is then passed through specially designed electrical machines where it is subjected to the action of the electricity purifying air, and the results are certainly little less than marvellous.

The finished flour emerges from the electrical purifiers, a beautiful silvery white color; perfectly sterilized and absolutely pure. The quality is improved as well as the appearance, the purified flour is freed from every particle of the non-nutritive portions of the wheat, viz., the branny particles, leaving only a perfect flour containing the greatest amount of nutriment in the most easily assimilable form which makes a bread silvery white in color, pure, wholesome and delicious to the taste.

Many of the leading scientists in Great Britain, France and other countries were at first disinclined to accept the claims made as to the benefits to be derived from the electrical purification of the various foods, but subsequent thorough and extensive experiments over a period of several years, have conclusively shown that the electrical purification of flour is perfectly sterilizing and improves the various other qualities of flour and cereal products.

The patents covering these processes are valuable, is evidenced by the extensive litigation in which the said patentees are involved in both England and the United States, from which it is disclosed the fact that practically every large and important mill in both countries has adopted some one or other of the various patented systems in his mills and that is certainly the most conclusive evidence of the merit of the process.

In view of the apparent great importance in its wholesomeness and nutritive qualities of flour by use of the electrical process, it is hoped we may not be long before every miller will adopt the electrical system of purification.

The great and growing question of the day is the purification of food products; therefore everything that contributes to that end is hailed as a boon to humanity. No expense should be spared in bring every food product to the highest possible degree of purity.

The New System Treatment, Anti-Pill Continues to Work Wonderful Cures.

When Dr. Leonhardt, of Lincoln, Neb., gave Anti-Pill to the world he had unbounded faith in the treatment but he did not foresee the wonderful and wonderful results it is now achieving in the cure of disease.

Here is the story of another Anti-Pill victory:

This treatment is a success and made a new woman of me. I am able to do my own work, my dizziness has all gone, my stomach feels much better, and I am no longer troubled with constipation. THE WINGS OF THE MORNING

BY LOUIS TRACY.

"How could it affect you? You did not even know my name then?"

"It affected me because the sudden mention of his name recalled my own disgrace. I quitted the army six months ago, Miss Deane, under very painful circumstances. A general court martial found me guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. I was not even given a chance to resign. I was cashiered."

He pretended to speak with cool truculence. He thought to compel her into shrinking contempt. Yet his face blanched somewhat, though he steadily kept the pipe between his teeth and smoked with studied unconcern, his lips twitched a little.

And he dared not look at her, for the girl's wondering eyes were fixed upon him, and the blush had disappeared as quickly as it came.

"I remember something of this," she said slowly, never once averting her gaze. "There was some gossip concerning it when I first came to Hongkong. You are Captain Robert Anstruther?"

"I am."

"And you publicly thrashed Lord Ventnor as the result of a quarrel about a woman?"

"Your recollection is quite accurate."

"Who was to blame?"

"The lady said that I was."

"Was it true?"

Robert Anstruther, late captain of Bengal cavalry, rose to his feet. He preferred to take his punishment standing.

"The court martial agreed with her, Miss Deane, and I am a prejudiced witness," he replied.

"Who was the—lady?"

"The wife of my colonel, Mrs. Costobell."

"Oh!"

Long afterward he remembered the agony of that moment and winced even at the remembrance. But he had decided upon a fixed policy, and he was not a man to flinch from consequences. Miss Deane must be taught to despise him, else—God help them both—she might learn to love him as he now loved her. So, blundering toward his goal, as men always blunder where a woman's heart is concerned, he steadily persisted in allowing her to make such false deductions as she chose from his words.

Iris was the first to regain some measure of self control.

"I am glad you have been so candid, Captain Anstruther," she commenced, but he broke in abruptly:

"Jenks, if you please, Miss Deane; Robert Jenks."

"Certainly, Mr. Jenks. Let me be equally explicit before we quit the subject. I have met Mrs. Costobell. I do not like her. I consider her a deceitful woman. Your court martial might have found a different verdict had its members been of her sex. As for Lord Ventnor, he is nothing to me. It is true he asked my father to be permitted to pay his addresses to me, but my dear old dad left the matter wholly to my decision, and I certainly never favored Lord Ventnor after his encouragement. I believe now that Mrs. Costobell lied and that Lord Ventnor lied when they attributed any dishonorable action to you, and I am glad that you beat him in the club. I am quite sure he deserved it."

Not one word did this strange maid vouchsafe in reply. He started violently, seized the ax lying at his feet and went straight among the trees, keeping his face turned from Iris so that she might not see the tears in his eyes.

As for the girl, she began to scour her cooking utensils with much energy and soon commenced a song. Considering that she was compelled to constantly endure the company of a disgraced officer, who had been expelled from the service with ignominy, she was absurdly contented. Indeed, with the happy inconsequence of youth, she quickly threw all care to the winds and devoted her thoughts to planning a surprise for the next day by preparing some tea, provided she could surreptitiously open the chest.

CHAPTER VII.

BEFORE eight closed their third day on the island Jenks managed to construct a roomy tent house, with a framework of sturdy trees selected at no distance of their location. To these he nailed or tied crosspieces of felled saplings, and the tarpaulins dragged from the beach supplied roof and walls. It required the united strength of Iris and himself to haul into position the heavy sheet that topped the structure, while he was completely engulfed in its folds in building operations in order to fashion a rough ladder. Without some such contrivance he could not get the topmost supports adjusted at a sufficient height.

Although the edifice required at least two more days of hard work before it would be fit for habitation Iris wished to take up her quarters there immediately. This the sailor would not hear of.

"In the cave," he said, "you are absolutely sheltered from all the winds that blow or rain that falls. Our rills, however, be painfully low and drafty at present. When asleep, the whole body is relaxed, and you are then most open to the attacks of cold or fever, in which case, Miss Deane, I should be reluctantly obliged to dose you with a concoction of that tree there."

He pointed to a neighboring cinchona, and Iris naturally asked why he selected that particular brand.

"Because it is quinine, not made up in nice little tabloids, but au naturel. It will not be a bad joke if we prepare a strong infusion and take a small quantity every morning on the excellent principle that prevention is better than cure."

The girl laughed.

Curiously enough—the lifting of the veil upon the man's character had made these two talkative much better friends. With more complete acquaintance there was far less tendency toward certain passages which under ordinary conditions could be construed as nothing else than downright flirtation. Thenceforth for ten days they labored unceasingly, starting work at daybreak and stopping only when the light failed, finding the long hours of sunshine all too short for the manifold tasks demanded of them, yet thankful that the night brought rest. The sailor made out a programme to which he rigidly adhered. In the first place, he completed the house, which had two compartments—an inner room, in which Iris slept, and an outer, which served as a kitchen for their meals and provided a bedroom for the man.

Then he constructed a gigantic sky sign on Summit rock, the small cluster of bowlders at the top of the cliff. His chief difficulty was to hoist into place the tall poles he needed, and for this purpose he had a perfect visit from Tree rock in order to secure the pulley. By exercising much ingenuity in devising shear-legs he at last succeeded in lifting the masts into their allotted receptacles, where they were firmly secured. Finally he was able to swing into air, high above the tops of the neighboring trees, the lettees of which he felled in order to clear the view on all sides, the name of the ship Sirdar, fashioned in six foot letters nailed and spliced together in sections and made from the timbers of that ill fated vessel.

The name of the ship.

Meanwhile he taught Iris how to weave a net out of the strands of unraveled cordage. With this, weighted by bullets, he contrived a casting net and caught a lot of small fish in the lagoon. Among the fish caught they hit upon two species which most resembled whiting and haddock, and these turned out to be very palatable and wholesome.

Jenks knew, a good deal of botany and enough about birds to differentiate between carnivorous species and those fit for human food, while the salt in their meat rendered their meals almost epicurean.

From the rusty rifles on the reef Jenks brought away the bayonets and secured all the screws, bolts and other small odds and ends which might be serviceable. From the barrels he built a handy grate to facilitate Iris' cooking operations, and a careful search each morning amid the ashes of any burned wreckage accumulated a store of most useful nails.

The pressing need for a safe yet accessible bathing place led him and the girl to devote one afternoon to a complete survey of the coast line. By this time they had given names to all the chief localities. The northerly promontory was naturally christened North cape; the western, Europa point; the portion of the reef between their habitation and Palm tree rock became Filey Brig; the other section Northwest reef. The first sandy passage across the island, containing the cave, home and well, was named Prospect park, and the extensive stretch of sand on the southeast, with its guard of broken reefs, was at once dubbed Turtle beach when Jenks discovered that an immense number of green turtles were paying their spring visit to the island to bury their eggs in the sand.

The two began their tour of inspection by passing the scene of the first desperate struggle to escape from the clutch of the typhoon. Iris would not be content until the sailor showed her the rock behind which he placed her for shelter while he searched for water. For a time the recollection of their unfortunate companions on board ship brought a lump into her throat and dimmed her eyes.

"I remember them in my prayers every night," she confided to him. "It seems so unutterably sad that they should be lost while we are alive and happy."

The man distracted her attention by pointing out the embers of their first fire. It was the only way to check back the tumultuous feelings that suddenly stormed his heart. Happy! Yes, he had never before known such happiness. How long would it last? High up on the cliff swung the signal to anxious searchers of the sea that here would be found the survivors of the Sirdar. And then when rescue came, when Miss Deane became once more the daughter of a wealthy baronet and he a disgraced and nameless outcast! He set his teeth and savagely struck at a full cup of the pitcher plant which had so providentially relieved their killing thirst.

"Oh, why did you do that?" pouted Iris. "Poor thing; it was a true friend in need. I wish I could do something for it to make it the best and tendest plant of its kind on the island."

"Very well," he answered, "you can gratify your wish. A tinful of fresh water from the well applied daily to its roots will quickly achieve that end."

The moroseness of his tone and manner surprised her. For one quick intuition failed to divine the source of his irritation.

"You give your advice ungraciously," she said, "but I will adopt it nevertheless."

A harmless incident, a kindly and quite feminine resolve, yet big with fate for both of them.

Jenks' unwonted ill humor—for the passage of days had driven from his face all its harshness and from his tongue all its assumed bitterness—created a passing cloud until the physical exertion of scrambling over the reef to round the fourth cape restored their normal relations.

At last they reached the south side, and here they at once found themselves in a delightfully secluded and tiny bay, sandy, tree lined, sheltered on three sides by cliffs and rocks.

"Oh," cried Iris excitedly, "what a lovely spot, a perfect fairy smugglers' cove!"

"Charming enough to look at," was the answering comment, "but open to the sea. If you look at the smooth band of water out there you will perceive a passage through the reef. A great place for sharks, Miss Deane, but no place for bathers."

They passed on. While traversing the coral strewn south beach, with its patches of white soft sand baking in the direct rays of the sun, Jenks perceived traces of the turtle which swarmed in the neighboring sea.

"Delicious eggs and turtle soup!" he announced when Iris asked him why he was so intently studying certain marks on the sand, caused by the great sea tortoise during their nocturnal visits to the breeding ground.

"If they are green turtle," he continued, "we are in the lap of luxury. They lard the skinless meat with the fat pork. When a ship comes to our assistance I will persuade the captain to freight the vessel with them and make my fortune."

"I suppose, under the circumstances, you were not a rich man, Mr. Jenks," said Iris timidly.

"I possess a wealthy bachelor uncle who made me his heir and allowed me four hundred a year, so I was a sort of Croesus among my staff corps officers. When the smash came he disowned me by cable. By selling my ponies and my other belongings I was able to walk out of my quarters penniless, but free from debt."

"And all through a deceitful woman!"

"Yes."

She ventured a further step.

"Was she very bad to you, Mr. Jenks?"

He stopped and laughed—actually roared—at the suggestion.

"Bad to me!" he repeated. "I had nothing to do with her. She was but a bagging her husband, not me. Fool that I was, I could not mind my own business."

So Mrs. Costobell was not flirting with the man who suffered on her account. It is a regrettable but true statement that Iris would willingly have hugged Mrs. Costobell at that moment.

Rounding Europa point, the sailor's eyes were fixed on their immediate surroundings, but Iris gazed dreamily ahead. Hence it was that she was the first to cry in amazement:

"A boat! See, there! On the rocks!"

There was no mistake. A ship's boat was perched high and dry on the north side of the cape. Even as they scrambled toward it Jenks understood why it had come there.

When the Sirdar parted amidships the after section fell back into the depths beyond the reef, and this boat must have broken loose from its davits and been driven ashore here by the force of the western current.

Was it intact? Could they escape? Was this ark stranded on the island for their benefit? If it were seaworthy, whither should they steer—to those islands whose blue outlines were visible on the horizon?

These and a hundred other questions coursed through his brain during the race over the rocks, but all such wild speculations were promptly settled when they reached the craft, for the keel and the whole of the lower timbers were smashed into matchwood.

But there were stores on board, Jenks remembered that Captain Ross' foresight had secured the provisioning of all the ship's boats soon after the first wild rush to steady the vessel after the propeller was lost. Masts, sails, oars, seats—all save two water casks—had gone, but Jenks, with eager hands, unfastened the lockers, and here he found a good supply of tinned meats and biscuits. They had barely recovered from the excitement of this find when the sailor noticed that behind the rocks on which the craft was firmly lodged lay a small natural basin full of salt water, replenished and freshened by the spray of every gale and completely shut off from all seaward access.

It was not more than four feet deep, beautifully carpeted with sand and secluded by rocks on all sides. Of the tiniest crab or fish was to be seen. It provided an ideal bath.

Iris was overjoyed. She pointed toward their habitation.

"Mr. Jenks," she said, "I will be with you at teatime."

He gathered all the tins he was able to carry and strode off, enjoining her to fire her revolver if for the slightest reason she wanted assistance, and giving a parting warning that if she delayed too long he would come and shout to her.

"I wonder," said the girl to herself, watching his retreating figure, "what he is afraid of. Surely by this time we have exhausted the unpleasant surprises of the island. Anyhow, now for a splash!"

She was hardly in the water before she began to be afraid on account of Jenks. Suppose anything happened to him while she was thoughtlessly enjoying herself here! So strongly did the thought possess her that she hurriedly dressed again and ran off to find him.

He was engaged in fastening a number of bayonets transversely to a long piece of timber.

"What are you doing that for?" she asked.

"Why did you return so soon? Did anything alarm you?"

"I thought you might get into mischief," she confessed.

On the other hand, I am trying to make trouble for any unwelcome visitors," he replied. "I intend to set this up in front of our cave in case we are compelled to defend ourselves against an attack by savages. With this barring the way they cannot rush the position."

On the nineteenth day of their residence on the island the sailor climbed, as was his invariable habit, to the Summit rock while Iris prepared breakfast. At this early hour the horizon was clearly cut as the rim of a sapphire. He examined the whole arc of the sea with his glasses, but not a sail was in sight. According to his calculations the growing anxiety as to the fate of the Sirdar must long ere this have culminated in the dispatch from Hongkong or Singapore of a special search vessel, while British warships in the China sea would be warned to keep a close lookout for any traces of the steamer, to visit all islands on their route and to question fishermen whom they encountered. So help might come any day or it might be long deferred. He could not pierce the future, and it was useless to vex his soul with questionings as to what might happen next week. The great certainty of the hour was Iris—the blue eyed, smiling divinity who had come into his life—watching for him down there beyond the trees, waiting to welcome him with a sweet voiced greeting, and he knew, with a fierce devouring joy, that her cheek would not pale nor her lip tremble when he announced that at least another sun must set before the expected relief reached them."

He replaced the glasses in their case and dived into the wood, giving a passing thought to the fact that the wind, after blowing steadily from the south for nearly a week, had veered round to the northeast during the night. Did the change portend a storm? Well, they were now prepared for all such eventualities, and he had not forgotten that the provisions, among other treasures, a box of books for rainy days. And a rainy day with Iris for company! What gale that ever blew could offer such compensation for enforced idleness?

The morning sped in uneventful work. Iris did not neglect her cherished pitcher plant. After luncheon it was her custom now to carry a dishful of water to its apparently arid roots, and she rose to fulfill her self imposed task.

"Let me help you," said Jenks. "I am not very busy this afternoon."

"No, thank you. I simply won't allow you to touch that shrub. The dear thing looks quite glad to see me. It drinks up the water as greedily as a thirsty animal."

Iris had been gone perhaps five minutes when he heard a distant shriek, twice repeated, and there was no mistaking in his ears his own name, not "Jenks," but "Robert," in the girl's voice. Something terrible had happened. It was a cry of supreme distress. Mortal agony or overwhelming terror alone could wring that name from her lips. Precisely in such moments this man acted with the decision, the unerring judgment, the instantaneous acceptance of great risk to accomplish great results, that marked him out as a born soldier.

He rushed into the house and snatched from the rack one of the rifles reposing there in apple pie order, each with a filled magazine attached and a cartridge already in position.

Then he ran with long strides not through the trees, where he could see nothing, but toward the beach, whence in forty yards the place where Iris probably was would become visible.

At once he saw her struggling in the grasp of two ferocious looking Dyaks, one by his garments a person of consequence, the other a half naked savage, hideous and repulsive in appearance. Around them seven men armed with guns and parangs were dancing with excitement.

Iris' captors were endeavoring to tie her arms, but she was a strong and active Englishwoman, with muscles well knit by the constant riding of wood pony day and a frame developed by years of horse riding and tennis playing. The pair evidently found her a tough handful, and the inferior Dyak, either to stop her screams—for she was shrieking, "Robert, come to me!" with all her might—or to stifle her into submission, roughly placed his huge hand over her mouth.

These things the sailor noticed instantly. Some men, brave to rashness, ready as he is in his life to save her, would have raced madly over the intervening ground, scarce a furlong, and attempted a heroic combat of one against four.

Not so Jenks.

With the methodical exactness of the parade ground he settled down on one knee and leveled the rifle.

None of the Dyaks saw him. All were intent on the sensational prize they had secured, a young and beautiful white woman so contentedly roaming about the shores of this fetish island. With the slow speed advised by the Roman philosopher the back sight and fore sight of the rifle came into line with the breast of the coarse brute clutching the girl's face.

Then something bit him above the heart and simultaneously tore half of his head into fragments. He fell, with a queer sob, and the others turned to face this unexpected danger.

Iris, knowing only that she was free from the hateful grip, wrenched herself free from the chief's hold and ran with all her might along the beach to Jenks and safety.

Again and yet again the rifle gave its short, sharp snarl, and two more Dyaks collapsed on the sand. Six were now their leader being still unconsciously preserved from death by the figure of the flying girl.

A fourth Dyak dropped.

These cowardly savages, but not cowards, unslung their guns. The sailor, white faced, grim, with an unpleasant gleam in his deep set gray and a lower jaw protruding, noticed their preparations.

"To the left!" he shouted. "Run toward the trees!"

Iris heard him and strove to obey, but her strength was failing her, and she staggered blindly. After a few despairing efforts she lurched feebly to her knees and tumbled face downward on the broken coral that had tripped her faltering footsteps.

Jenks was watching her, watching the remaining Dyaks, from whom a spluttering volley came, picking out his quarry with the murderous ease of a terrier in a rat pit. Something like a bee in a violent hurry hummed past his ear, and a rock near his right foot was struck a tremendous blow by an unseen agency. He liked this. It would be a battle, not a battue.

The fifth Dyak crumpled into the distortion of death, and then their leader took deliberate aim at the kneeling marksman who threatened to wipe him and his band out of existence. But his deliberation, though skillful, was too profound. The sailor fired first and was professionally astonished to see the gaudily attired leader spin round backward for many yards, finally pitching headlong to the earth. Had he been charged by a bull in full career he could not have been more utterly discomfited. The incident was sensational, but inexplicable.

Yet another member of the band was prostrated ere the two as yet unscathed thought fit to beat a retreat. This they now did with celerity, but they dragged their chief with them. It was no part of Jenks' programme to allow them to escape. He aimed again at the man nearest the trees. There was a sharp click and nothing more. The cartridge was a misfire. He hastily sought to eject it, and the rifle jammed.

Springing to his feet, with a yell, he ran forward. The flying men caught a glimpse of him and accelerated their movements. Just as he reached Iris they vanished among the trees.

Slinging the rifle over his shoulder, he picked up the girl in his arms. She was conscious, but breathless.

"You are not hurt?" he gasped, his eyes blazing into her face with an intensity that she afterward remembered as appalling.

"No," she whispered.

"Listen," he continued in labored jerks. "Try and obey me—exactly. I will carry you—to the cave. Stop there. Shoot any one you see—till I come."

She bent him wonderingly. Was he going to leave her, now that he had her safely clasped to his breast? Impossible! Ah, she understood. Those men must have landed in a boat. He intended to attack them again. He was going to fight them single handed, and she would not know what happened to him until it was all over. Gradually her vitality returned. She almost smiled at the fantastic conceit that she would desert him.

Jenks placed her on her feet at the entrance to the cave.

"You understand," he cried, and without waiting for an answer ran to the house for another rifle. This time, to her amusement, he darted back through Prospect park, toward the south beach. The sailor knew that the Dyaks had landed at the sandy bay Iris had christened Smugglers' cove. They were acquainted with the passage through the reef and came from the distant islands.

Now they would endeavor to escape by the same channel. They must be prevented at all costs.

He was right. As they came out into the open he saw three men, not two, pushing off a large sampan. One of them was the chief. Then Jenks understood that his bullet had hit the lock of the Dyak's uplifted weapon, with the result already described. By a miracle he had escaped.

He could prepared to slay the three of them with the same calm purpose that distinguished the opening phase of this singularly one sided conflict. The distance was much greater, perhaps 800 yards from the point where the boat came into view. He knelt and fired. He judged that the missile struck the craft between the trie.

"I didn't allow for the sun on the side of the fore sight," he said, "or perhaps I am a bit shaky after the run. In any event they can't go far."

A hurrying step on the coral behind him caught his ear instantly he sprang up and faced about—to see Iris.

"They are escaping," she said.

"No fear of that," he replied, turning away from her.

"Where are the others?"

"Dead!"

"Do you mean that you killed nearly all those men?"

"Six of them. There were nine in all."

He knelt again, lifting the rifle. Iris threw herself on her knees by his side. There was something awful to her in this chill and businesslike declaration of a fixed purpose.

"Mr. Jenks," she said, clasping her hands in an agony of entreaty, "do not kill more men for my sake!"

"For my own sake, then," he growled, annoyed at the interruption, as the sampan was afloat.

"Then I ask you for God's sake not to take another life. What you have already done was unavoidable, perhaps right. This is murder!"

He lowered his weapon and looked at her.

"If those men get away they will bring back a host to avenge their comrades—and secure you," he added.

"It may be the will of Providence for such a thing to happen. Yet I implore you to spare them."

He placed the rifle on the sand and raised her tenderly, for she had yielded to a paroxysm of tears. Not another word did either of them speak in that hour. The large triangular sail of the sampan was now bellying out in the south wind. A figure stood up in the stern of the boat and shook a menacing arm at the couple on the beach.

It was the Malay chief, cursing them with the rude eloquence of his barbarous tongue. And Jenks well knew what he was saying.

The Suit a Man Wears.

Clothing is an expression of individuality evidence of the thought—or lack of it—given it by the wearer. It used to be mostly a matter of the tailor—now it is largely a question of which store a man gives thought to.

Is he careless—i different? Any store will do for him. Just so he's clothed, he's content. We clothe lots of these careless men, but we also clothe a great many men whose clothing proclaims them as being very exacting in dress

THE ROBINSON COMPANY

COMMENCED A SALE OF MEN'S AND BOYS'

Ready-to-wear Clothing

ON THURSDAY, MAY 25th.

The buyer visited Hamilton last week and secured from The W. E. Sanford Mfg. Co. over two hundred Men's and Boys' Suits. These suits are lines which are selling best this season, and are all new up-to-date goods. When a manufacturer's stock of any kind is all sold out but a few suits, they are willing to lose money on them in order to clear them out. That is the reason we secured these at the prices we did.

Men's Suits worth $ 6.50 to 8.50 will be sold for $5.00.
" " 8.50 to 10.00 " " 7.50.
" " 12.00 to 14.00 " " 10.00.
" " 15.00 to 17.50 " " 12.50.

Boys's 3-piece Suits and 2-piece Norfolk Suits correspondingly reduced. Also Children's Norfolk Suits, Men's and Youths' Raincoats.

A SPLENDID CIRCUS.

Yesterday was circus day in Napanee, and the town was filled with a good-natured crowd of people who came in to see the widely advertised Sells & Downs circus. As early as 4 a.m. a large number of people congregated at the station to see the cars unloaded. In days gone by the work of unloading a circus was accompanied by a continual flow of blasphemy and uproar, the absence of which yesterday in rainy weather was a very noticeable and pleasing feature.

The customary street parade took place at 10.30 o'clock, and was a great deal better than that of the ordinary circus. The horses are a handsome lot of animals, and well worth going miles to see. Elephants, camels, dromedaries, lions, leopards, hyenas, etc., etc., as well as several closed cages of smaller animals were on parade. Three bands, a steam calliope and the indispensable clown pleased and amused the crowds along the line of procession. Eight ladies dressed in white satin and mounted on white horses was another pleasing feature. The cleanliness and neatness exhibited in every department of this show was certainly remarkable

One actress worthy of special mention was Miss Lulu Davenport, an equestrienne of rare ability, who performed some exceptionally difficult feats on her favorite horse. It would be impossible to mention all the good things with this circus as space will not permit us, suffice it to say that the big show came up fully to expectations, and all who went into the large tent got their money's worth.

Spackages of Diamond, Turkish, Standard or Rexall Dyes for 25 cts., at Wallace's Drug Store.

NEWBURGH.

The conundrum social in the Methodist church on Monday evening was a decided success. A very interesting programme was given and dainty refreshments were served at fourteen small tables. Each table was prettily decorated with flowers, and the leaguers were very attentive in waiting on their guests. The only disagreeable feature of the evening was the noise made by a few from the village. It seems too bad that such entertainments are disturbed every time. We understand that in future at any attempt at rough house the offender will be made an example of. Victoria Day was quietly observed in the village, many villagers celebrating with fireworks in the evening.

The ladies of St. John's church, Newburgh, will hold a lawn soci'al on the Nimmo homestead, east of the village, on Monday evening next. Refreshments will be served, and an interesting programme rendered. The Tamworth brass band will play during the evening. The ladies of St. John's church have the reputation of doing things in the right way, and an enjoyable time is in store for all who go. Admission, 25 cts.

Saturday evening, May 20th, the village of Camden East was enlivened by a baseball match between the boys of Camden East attending the N.H.S., and the men of Camden East. The game was a very lively one and although the attendance was small they cheered as much as most large crowds could do. The Seniors had Roy Smith and Robt. Guy as their battery, but owing to some costly errors made by their fielders they were defeated by the Juniors by a score of 19 to 11. Mr. Bryan umpired the game and filled the position very nicely. The teams lined up as follows:

TAMWORTH.

A set of five pictures of Tamworth, England, which were presented by C. F. Cast, Esq., the Mayor of that ancient town, has just been placed in our town hall here, and they are very much admired. They are mounted on a large pebble board and enclosed in a heavy solid oak frame. Along with the pictures are also the portraits of Mayor Cast and our own Reeve, J. A. Wagar, Esq. There is also an enlarged representation of the seal of Tamworth with its quaint inscription, and a short printed history of the "Town and Town" from the pen of Rev. W. H. Adams. This splendid picture is a decided addition to the appearance of the interior of our hall and it will have permanent interest and value for our citizens. Messrs. Floyd & Co. expect in a few days to have local souvenirs for sale enamelled with the Tamworth fleur-de-lis, which will be noted on the seal in question; and D. E. Rose is obtaining a quantity of souvenir stationery which is to be similarly embellished. Owing to Mayor Cast's generosity our citizens are manifesting a lively interest in the old English borough and all belonging to it.

May 24th was celebrated here in a royal way. A number of citizens took in the excursion to Wellington; others drove to Arden. The Epworth League had a picnic at Beaver Lake, and there were ten parties in town. Flags were flying everywhere, and fire crackers finished off the day's festivities. Mr. Addison Keller, who took a photograph of the league picnic at the lake, expects to have it finished for Saturday next.

EASTERN METHODIST CHURCH.

A YEAR OF PROGRESS.

A great deal of interest naturally centres in this historic church just now when rumors are fairly well authenticated as to the intention of the Eastern Methodists to mark time with the progress and development of this stirring province.

We are assured that whilst looking towards the erection of a new church edifice which will be at once a credit to the management and an ornament to the town, and which, as such, will secure the sympathy and no doubt co-operation of our citizens at large, the church has made no backward step in its support of connexional schemes during the year. There has been an increase in its membership—$1016.27 is the amount of its contribution to Missions. For the Superannuated Ministers' Fund $119, while for Connexional Funds, including Educational and Sustentation, the amount raised is $104.17. In the Sunday School and Epworth League $240 was paid for circuit purposes. The Ladies' Aid Society contributed the sum of $206, and the Trustee Board $1356, the Woman's Missionary Society raising $467. Not to enlarge unduly, the grand total sums up for Connexional Funds $1949.29, for circuit purposes $2356, making with ministerial support the total sum of $5053.29. With such a showing as the above we cannot but express the wish that the progressive spirit of the church to erect a modern and convenient structure may be carried into happy effect, as without question it will. Ministers and official members, with the church at large are to be congratulated on their good returns to Conference.

Marchioness Oyama, wife of the Japanese Napoleon, is an expert fencer, swimmer and horsewoman. As a student of botany, sociology and forcign languages, she is in the first rank. She is the foremost authority in her country on Shakespeare.

HOW GERM DISEASES START.

PEOPLE WITH WEAK STOMACHS IN A CONTINUAL STATE OF DANGER.

Nearly all disease germs that find lodgment in the system gain entrance with the air we breathe, or through our food and drink.

The stomach and digestive organs of a man that food does not readily digest will contain a sour, stagnant, digesting mass, an ideal spot for disease germs to grow and spread through the whole system.

People with a weak stomach are in a continual state of danger, and they should use the best means, Mi-o-na, the system that organizes and tones up the whole digestive system. This remedy is a certain cure for all diseases of the stomach excepting cancer. Used before each meal, it so strengthens the whole digestive system that you can eat what and all you want without fear of indigestion. There will be no fermentation of food, and the stomach and intestines will be so clean and pure that disease germs cannot possibly live, when Mi-o-na is used.

If you suffer with headache, backache, variable appetite, nausea, gnawing at the pit of the stomach, sallow skin, heart-burn, furred tongue, sleeplessness, and general debility, it shows that the stomach has been overworked and weakened. A fifty cent box of Mi-o-na tablets will give quick and speedy relief.

Ask T. H. Wallace, one of the most reliable druggists in Napanee to show you the strong guarantee under which he sells Mi-o-na.

CLARK'S LUSCIOUS LUNCH TONGUE

Has a flavor all its own. The delicious juicy taste stimulates all the digestive functions.

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, the medicine that never fails to effect a cure. Those who have used it say it acts promptly, and thoroughly subdues the pain and disease.

"I hate here," said the amateur golfer, as he extracted a small model from his grip, "a device that will warn the engineer of a train of the approach crossing the track."

"A good," replied the railway manager. "It's the party crossing the track that requires the warning."

A Soothing Oil—To throw oil upon the troubled waters means to subdue the calmness. We must boisterous era. To apply Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil to the troubled waters of pain has the same result. It quickly subjugation of the most refractory elements. It cures pain, heals bruises, takes the fire from burns, and as a general household liniment is useful in many ailments. It is worth much.

Tommy, dressed for evening party.—Mother, shall I wash my hands, or put on gloves?

The healthy glow disappearing from the cheeks and much natural rest they get at night are sure symptoms of worms in children. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is an effectual medicine.

Said pa, "Little miss,
Grant me just a kiss;"
"Tis for one-only one that I sue."
As she blushed to refuse,
She exclaimed in surprise,
"Why! the other one's always want two."

"Biliousness Burdens Life.—The biliousman is never a companionable man because his ailment renders him morose and gloomy. The complaint is not so dangerous as it is disagreeable. Yet no one need suffer from it who can procure Dr. Agnew's Liver Pills. They by regulating the liver and obviating the effects of bile in the stomach quickly restore men to cheerfulness and full vigor of action.

The Old Millionaire—Tis'k of all the dauntless I could give you.

Miss Fert—A ring, father would do just as well, why don't you marry my mother?

Useful At All Times.—In winter or in summer Dr. Agnew's Vegetable Pills will cope with and overcome any irregularities of the digestive organs whatever change of diet, change of residence, or exposure to unwholesome may bring about. They should be always kept at hand, and the most beneficial action becomes known, no one will be without them. For biliousness, headache, heating in their structure, and the most delicate can use them confidently.

Parson Brown—What you' got dat fo'reemenstry on de floor fo', Mrs. Smif?

Mrs. Smith—Well, yo' see, parson, de doctor were 'bleh an' it were hangin' on de wall an' he done said it were too high.

Boy—I dunno, sir, I god such a cold I can't smell nothing. 9-1c.

She—Would you have me believe I am the first girl you ever proposed to?

He — Goodness, no! I suppose I've asked a dozen.

She—And they all refused you?

He—Of course. Every one of them knew I was head over heels in love with you.

She—You dear boy!

Little Johnny's father had just broken a fancy plate.

"It's a good thing you ain't a kid, papa, said the little fellow, for mamma wouldn't do a thing to you."

Chappe—As I was saying, I had $50 on Topnoch as it ran, but the race was two miles and Topnotch won.

Chauncey—What was the time?

Chappie—Why, er—er—I heard the clock strike two just as I won.

"Mamma," said a young hopeful the other day, "who is my closest relation? Are you?"

"No," sweetly replied the mother, "your father has that distinction. He never gives me a cent unless I ask him for it."

And it was a full half hour before the old man discovered that the paper he was reading was upside down.

The Sportswoman—Upson— is Miss Roze a good shot?

She always darned her hose with silk—The ladies' fancy quite extensive—
The price of silk was very high;
Which made them darned expensive.

Safety For Children.

Mothers should never give their little ones a medicine that they do not know to be perfectly safe and harmless. All so-called soothing medicines contain poisonous opiates that stupefy the child instead of relieving the ailments. Baby's Own Tablets is the only medicine for infants and young children, and every doctor or mother a positive guarantee that it contains no opiate or harmful drug. Milton L. Hersey, M.Sc., (McGill University,) has analyzed these tablets and says, "I hereby certify that I have made a careful analysis of Baby's Own Tablets, which are personally purchased in a drug store in Montreal, and we did analysis has failed to detect the presence of any opiate or narcotic in them." This means that mothers can give their little ones these tablets with all assurance that they will do good—that they cannot possibly do harm. Baby's Tablets cure indigestion, colic, constipation, diarrhoea, simple teething troubles and all minor ailments. Sold by druggists or sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ARDEN

Service in the Methodist church was largely attended last Sunday evening. Next Sunday evening the service will be in the hands of the Independent Order of Good Templars. The order will march from their lodge room to the church with their regalia. The temperance sermon will be preached by Bro. A. C. Huffman. The singing will be led by a choir of young men, who are members of the Order. The lodge is in a most promising condition, the membership now being 120. The order has identified themselves with it. A goodly number of new joined every lodge night. The Epworth League is raising $200.56 instead of $175.00 as at the social last week toward the support of Dr. Emerson, our missionary in Japan.

In late years men have made fortunes not by the sinking of old and rich mines in which the ore formerly was crushed and the rock passed them, but in one allowed a large percentage of the precious metal to escape, and the fortune resulted in some cases to a fortune. The stomach is in some respect like a mine. In this respect that when it is not in perfect order it allows to escape and waste much of the food-nutriment contained in the food. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery corrects the indigestion of the stomach, prevents waste and loss of nutriment, and puts the digestive organs of digestion and nutrition into a condition to enable them to assimilate them to save and assimilate all the nutrient contained in the food which is eaten. In all cases of constipation the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets will speedily and permanently cure the disease.

PAIN ABOUT THE HIPS.

It is a common complaint with women. The cause is weakness of the womb, which penetrates to the seat of the pain, producing a dragging pain and weakness. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a powerful tonic and nervine which acts directly upon the womb, curing the irritation and pain, and by its potent ease after one bathing. No liniment so economical and safe. Fifty years in use, and in demand immensely greater every day! Nervoline must be good.

On the 15th inst., her remains were laid in a large number of friends, were taken to Erinsville, where the funeral service was sung by Rev. Father Carey. We Paid $100,000

For Liquozone. Yet We Give You a 50c. Bottle Free.

We paid $100,000 for the American rights to Liquozone; the highest price ever paid for similar rights on any scientific discovery. We did this after testing the product for two years, through physicians and hospitals, in this country and others. We cured all kinds of germ diseases with it—thousands of the most difficult cases obtainable. We proved that in germ troubles it always accomplishes what medicine cannot do. Now we ask you to try it—try it at our expense. Test it as we did; see what it does. Then you will use it always, as we do, and as millions of others do. You will use it, not only to get well, but to keep well. And it will save nearly all of your sickness.

Kills Inside Germs.

Liquozone is not made by compounding drugs, nor is there alcohol in it. Its virtues are derived solely from gas—largely oxygen gas—by a process requiring immense apparatus and 14 days' time. This process has, for more than 20 years, been the constant subject of scientific and chemical research. The result is a liquid that does what oxygen does. It is a nerve food and blood food—the most helpful thing in the world for you. It effects are exhilarating, vitalizing, purifying. Yet it is a germicide so certain that we publish on every bottle an offer of $1,000 for a disease germ that it cannot kill. The reason is that germs are vegetables; and Liquozone—like an excess of oxygen—is deadly to vegetal matter.

There lies the great value of Liquozone. It is the only way known to kill germs in the body without killing the tissues, too. Any drug that kills germs is a poison, and it cannot be taken internally. Medicine is almost helpless in any germ disease. It is this fact that gives Liquozone its worth to humanity. And that worth is so great that we have spent over one million dollars to supply the first bottle free to each sick one we learned of.

Germ Diseases.

These are the known germ diseases. All that medicine can do for these troubles is to help Nature overcome the germs, and such results are indirect and uncertain. Liquozone attacks the germs, wherever they are. And when the germs which cause a disease are destroyed, the disease must end, and forever. That is inevitable.

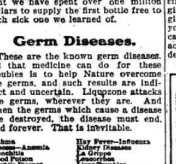
Chatham Incubators Hatch Spring Eggs into Fall Dollars.

May and June are the best months to start in. June hatched chicks grow like weeds during the early summer and many of the risks of the business are avoided if you start now.



No Cash to Pay Until Fall, 1905.

Every chick you can mature and market in October is worth 60cents, if not more. The next three months are the right ones in which to get started in the chicken-raising business. There's good money in it and the women folks and children can do all the work that needs to be done in about one half hour daily.

The way to make poultry pay is to get "broiler" chicks of uniform size and weight ready for the market when prices are highest, and the only way this can be done is with a good Incubator. The one that is sure and never-failing is the CHATHAM. If the egg is fertile the chick is sure to be hatched every time by a

So sure are we of results that we take chances on your success before we get our money for the machine.

We will ship you a Chatham Incubator, freight prepaid, and give you two years to pay for it. Nothing to pay until November, 1905.

The Chatham Incubator pays for itself every hatch, and if you get started now, which you should, the June hatched chicks will have a market value of 50c. each by October, thus enabling you to pay for the Incubator without using one cent of money not earned by the machine itself.

Our beautiful and complete book, "How to Make Money Out of Chicks," is the whole story. No poultry raiser can afford to be without it. Its FREE. Send for it NOW.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

Mr. C. B. Wainwright of Lemon City, Fla., has written the manufacturers of much better results are obtained from the use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in cases of pains in the stomach, colic and cholera morbus, than by taking it in water as hot as can be drank. That when given in this way the effect is double and more lasting. "It seems to get at the spot instantly," he says. For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 7.8d

CATTLE KILLED.

On Thursday afternoon of last week Mr. Fred. Perry, Chambers, had two milch cows killed on the railway crossing below Hilton cheese factory. His son Hugh, on horseback, was driving a herd of twenty-five cows across the track, and noticing a train approaching urged his horse up to the track to divert the herd, and let the train pass. It chanced to be the pay car, travelling sixty or seventy miles an hour. Before he had scarcely time to get his horse off the track the train swept by, killing two of the cows. Hugh also had a narrow escape from death, as a train travelling at that speed does not take long to reach a given point.

BETTING ON HYMN NUMBERS.

The London Tatler tells why no hymn under thirty-seven is sung at the English church at Monte Carlo. A member of the congregation, a certain English peer, once went to the gambling rooms on Sunday immediately after the morning service and put the maximum on thirty-two, the number of the last hymn. It turned up and the "inspiration" was widely talked about, as such things are in the frivolous society of the principality. The next Sunday the little church was crowded, and the last hymn being again a low number an unseemly rush to the rooms took place directly it was announced. Curiously enough the number again turned up, and the bank was badly hit. On the following Sunday the church would not hold all the would-be worshippers, as all the hymns were "off the board," and have been so ever since. The highest number on the roulette table is thirty-six.

CHANGES OF GOVERNMENT.

Don, in Saturday Night.

Now, as well as at any other time, it is perhaps becoming to admit that prior to the general elections in January I underestimated the good sense and capabilities of government which Premier Whitney has demonstrated since he has occupied the chief place in our Provincial Government. Absolutely and unequivocally I opposed the re-election of the Ross Government, but with plainly stated belief that Mr. Whitney and his friends were probably incapable of doing anything more than demonstrating their ineffectiveness. I hold unchanged the view that not another moment could the Ross Government have been tolerated, but I consider it odium of the most uncommon mistake that the Opposition had not qualified themselves by a declared policy or a strong position on any public question, to undertake a government acceptable to the less thought of Ontario. Everything has been done by the new Government that was at all expected. The old masters of the situation have been unnerved; even the corporations seem unmistakably out of the saddle. The Government having already repudiated an arrangement made early in January for additional power to be developed by the Provincial Power Company. This grasping corporation through our Hydro organization already has Toronto by the neck, and this distinct kink in the diaphragm will make it recognize that it does not own the earth and fulness of power thereof. The Whitney Government is showing the temperance people that it can do much in the way of bettering the liquor traffic without any demagogic resort to spread-eagle resolutions and unworkable statutes. Altogether, I feel that I owe an apology to the gentlemen of the Opposition who are now members of the Government, for discounting their ability and intentions, and in this expression of approval of a common-sense and reasonable administration I feel that I am only voicing the opinions of those who read this page.

HAY BAY.

A very pleasant event took place on the evening of May the seventeenth, at "Bay View", the beautifully situated home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Spencer, on the sunny slopes of the fair-famed Hay Bay, than which there is no more beautiful, safe and healthful sheet of water in the whole Province, all for the occasion of the marriage of Mr. S. W. Spencer to Miss Laura L. McWain. The ceremony was neatly performed by Rev. W. Down, of South Napanee, in the presence of a goodly number of the near relatives and intimate friends of the groom and bride. The beautiful young bride, who was attired in a lovely bridal costume of faultlessly fitting voile,—was given away by Mr. F. W. Spencer, and carried herself with charming grace, and modesty. The groom, who was dressed in spotless black, was supported in elegant style by Mr. A. McWain, brother of the bride, while the charming young Miss Mary Thompson, of Northport, P. E. Co., discharged the duties of bridesmaid, in splendid form, and wore a dainty gown of fawn voile and cream chiffon. At about nine o'clock p.m. the guests were conducted by Miss Hazel, to the spacious dining hall, where they were regaled with dainties rich and rare. While every thing on the board was of the very best, the bride's cake was simply a gem. At the close of the banquet, the guests drank to the health of the bride and groom, as well as of the host and hostess. The various wedding gifts were valuable and useful. The happy couple will be at home after the first of June.

COUNTY PRIZES AT THE NEXT FRUIT, FLOWER AND HONEY SHOW AT TORONTO.

The Ontario Fruit Growers' Association have on hand a scheme for the development of the apple industry that should meet with a hearty response. It is proposed to secure a grant from each county in Ontario of $25.00 or more, to be divided into three or four prizes to be competed for by growers within the County offering the prize at the Fruit, Flower and Honey Show, which has become a fixed feature at Toronto. The Association will pay the express on the fruit to Toronto and will hold the fruit in cold storage till the date of the show about the middle of November so that exhibitors can show as easily at Toronto as at a local fair.

A delegation will wait upon the County Councillors at their June meetings, and it is hoped that the councillors will favor the giving of a grant for this purpose. Other parts of the Dominion are advertising their advantages and are drawing heavily upon our population. This exhibition offers a splendid opportunity for bringing prominently before the public an industry that must assume immense proportions connected with the filling up of the North West. With co-operation in packing and selling apples, and the treasure skill and intelligence in the care of the orchards the industry may become a very important source of revenue in almost every County in Ontario.

BALLOON ACCIDENT.

Kingston, May 24th.—The balloon ascension at the Exhibition grounds this afternoon by William H. Allen of Rochester, N. Y., nearly ended in a fatality. When the balloon had risen about 25 feet the 3,000 spectators were horrified to behold the aeronaut lose his grip of the parachute bar and fall to the ground. Allen had swung out horizontally on leaving the ground, and was in this position that his hands dropped from the bar. He turned over once and then came heavily down, striking fortunately soft ground on his right shoulder and side. He lay stunned for a short time but recovered sufficiently to step into a carriage. A large crowd had surrounded him as he lay prostrate, and it took a number of artillerymen, on horseback to keep a clear ring. Allen was taken to the General Hospital, where it was found that no bones were broken. His injuries consisted of a bruised shoulder and cut eye. The balloon, it seems, caught fire, when almost 1 faster. Allen shouted to those holding the ropes to let go; they did so, but evidently the balloon rose more quickly than the aeronaut expected.

We, from any social feeling, in which you have proved yourself a kind neighbor and a friend to all you have come in contact with, on this Island, we feel, Sir, with all sincerity and truthfulness without any flattery that we are losing one of our most worthy citizens. In every office especially in which you have been called upon to act, you have performed your duties in an honorable and straightforward manner. From the way in which you discharged your duties as Councillor, the people recognized your fitness for the Stewardship, and also to represent them on the County Council board.

In conclusion, we, one and all, join in wishing you, Mrs. McKee and the family, every prosperity in your new home. Signed in behalf of the people of Amherst Island.

Nelson Shorts, a much respected resident of the village, was found dead in his bed on Saturday morning. The deceased had been a sufferer all winter with gangrene and early in the spring it was not thought he would last a week. However, he rallied and soon was able to be out. On Friday he was around the village and at 11 o'clock on Friday evening when his daughter gave him his medicine he was apparently as well as he had been for some time. Swept from the Sea.

TOGO, THE JAPANESE NELSON, ANNIHILATES THE RUSSIAN SQUADRONS.

Washington, May 29th.—The following official report from Tokio has been received at the Japanese Legation to-day:

Tokio, May 29th.—Report received from Admiral Togo at the Japanese headquarters.

First report received on the morning of May 27th:—"Immediately upon the receipt of the report that the Russian squadron was in sight our combined squadron started for the attack. The weather is fine to-day, but there is a heavy sea."

Second report received night of May 27th:—"Combined squadron attacked the Russian squadron to-day near Oshimoshima (southeast of Tsu Island) and defeated it, sinking at least four ships and inflicting heavy damage upon the others. The damage to our ships is insignificant. Our destroyers also torpedo flotillas delivered an attack after sunset."

Third report received Monday, May 29th:—"Main force of our combined squadron continued the pursuit since the 27th, and attacked on the 28th, near Liancourt Rocks a group of ships consisting of the Nicolai I. (battleship) (battleship), Senjavin, Apraxin and Admiral. The latter fled, but the rest, the remaining four vessels surrendered to us."

"No damage to our ships.

"According to the statements of prisoners, the vessels sunk in the engagement of May 27th were the Borodino, battleship, Alexander III., battleship Jemtschug and three others, Rear-Admiral Nebogatoff and Admiral two thousand other Russians were taken prisoners."

The following are the damages suffered by the enemy in addition to those given above since commencement of battle, as reported by commanders not under immediate command of Togo and by observation stations:—

Sunk—Admiral Nakhimoff, Dmitri Donskoi, Svetlana, Admiral Ouschakoff, Kamtchatka, Irutchusa and three destroyers.

Captured—Vladimir Monomach, four-decked artery capture. One special service ship, full name unknown, and one destroyer captured.

Russian losses definitely known so far may be classified as follows:—

SUNK.

Two battleships.
One coast defence ship.
Five cruisers.
Two special ships.
Three destroyers.

CAPTURED.

Two battleships.
Two coast defence Ironclads.
One special service ship.
One destroyer.

BATTLE STILL IN PROGRESS.

It is not yet clear whether the three vessels stated by prisoners to have been sunk are included or not in the above list. There are more than 6,000 prisoners besides the 2,000 taken by the main force of the combined squadron. The naval engagement is still in progress, so that it will take some time before the final results can be known.

DID TORPEDO BOATS CAUSE PANIC

London, May 29th.—The St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times, telegraphing to-day, says:

I hear, but cannot vouch for the correctness of the story, that Rojdvenisky boarded a destroyer and headed for Vladivostock, according to a story, seventy Japanese torpedo boats dashed headlong into the Russian squadron, sinking and disabling the battleships and cruisers, but a terrible cost of sixty-three boats lost. The reported capture of the Russian warships is put down to the panic caused by the torpedo attack.

RUSSIAN LOSSES OF NINETEEN VESSELS.

Tokio, May 29th, 9 p.m.—The number of Russian vessels of all descriptions sunk and captured by Admiral Togo's fleet now reads as follows, and it is possible that three additional warships were sunk in the fight on Saturday and later.

EIGHT RUSSIAN CAPTAINS DROWN.

London, May 29th.—A despatch to The London Evening News from Tokio says eight captains of Russian warships were drowned during the final battle of Saturday in the Straits of Corea. Reports are current on the Stock Exchange, purporting to be from authoritative private sources, to the effect that Vice-Admiral Rojestvensky's flagship, Knias Suvaroff, was among the vessels sunk, and that the Japanese are following up the Russians and sinking all their ships one by one.

THE WINGS OF THE MORNING

BY LOUIS TRACY.

CHAPTER VIII.

THEY looked long and steadfastly at the retreating boat. Soon it diminished to a mere speck on the smooth sea. The even breeze kept its canvas taut, and the sailor knew that no ruse was intended. The Dyaks were flying from the island in fear and rage. They would return with a force sufficient to insure the wreaking of their vengeance.

That he would again encounter them at no distant date Jenks had no doubt whatever. They would land in such numbers as to render any resistance difficult and a prolonged defense impossible. Would help come first?—a distracting question to which definite answer could not be given. The sailor's brow frowned in deep thought, his brain throbbed now with an anxiety singularity at variance with his outward demeanor during the fight. He was utterly unconscious that his left arm encircled the shoulder of the girl until she gently disengaged herself and said appealingly:

"Please, Mr. Jenks, do not be angry with me. I could not help it. I could not bear to see you shoot them."

Then he abruptly awoke to the realities of the moment.

"Come," he said, his drawn features relaxing into a wonderfully pleasing smile. "We will return to our castle. We are safe for the remainder of this day, at any rate."

Something must be said or done to reassure her. She was still grievously disturbed, and he naturally ascribed her agitation to the horror of her capture. He dreaded a complete collapse if any further alarms threatened at once. Yet he was almost positive—though search alone would set at rest the last misgiving—that only one sampan had visited the island. Evidently the Dyaks were unprepared to be for the events of the preceding half hour. They were either visiting the island to procure turtle and beche-de-mer or had merely called there en route to some other destination, and the change in the wind had unexpectedly compelled them to put ashore. Beyond all doubt they must have been surprised by the warmth of the reception they encountered.

Probably when he went to Summit rock that morning the savages had lowered their sail and were steadily paddling north against wind and current. The most careful scrutiny of the sea would fail to reveal them beyond a distance of six or seven miles at the utmost.

After landing in the hidden bay on the south side they crossed the island through the trees instead of taking the more natural open way along the beach. Why? The chief that he and Iris were then passing the grown over tract leading to the valley of death instantly determined this point. The Dyaks knew of the affrighted sailor and would not approach any nearer to it than was unavoidable. Could he twist this circumstance to advantage if Iris and he were attacked? Even when the superstitious sea rovers next put in an appearance? He would see. All depended on the girl's strength. As she gave way now; if, instead of taking instant measures for safety, he were called upon to nurse her through a fever, the outlook became not only desperate, but hopeless.

And, while he bent his brows in worrying thought, the color was returning to Iris' cheeks and natural buoyancy to her step. It is the fault of all men to underrate the marvelous courage and constancy of woman in the face of difficulties and trials. Jenks was no exception to the rule.

"You do not ask me for any account of my adventures," she said quietly, after watching his perplexed expression in silence for some time.

Her tone almost startled him, its unassumed cheerfulness was so unlooked for.

"No," he answered. "I thought you were too overwrought to talk of them at present."

"Overwrought! Not a bit of it! I was dead beat with the struggle and with screaming at you, but please don't imagine that I am going to faint or treat you to a display of hysteria now that all the excitement has ended. I admit that I cried a little when you pushed me aside on the beach and raised your gun to fire at those poor wretches flying for their lives. Yet perhaps I was wrong to hinder you."

"You were wrong," he gravely interrupted.

"Then you should not have heeded me. No, I don't mean that. You always consider me first, don't you? No matter what I ask you to do you endeavor to please me even when you know all the time that I am acting or speaking foolishly."

The unthinking naivete of her words sent the blood coursing wildly through his veins.

"Never mind," she went on, with earnest simplicity. "God has been very good to us. I cannot believe that he has preserved us from so many dangers to permit us to perish miserably a few hours or days before help comes. And I do want to tell you exactly what happened."

"Then you shall," he answered. "But first drink." They had reached their camping ground, and he hastened to procure a small quantity of brandy.

She swallowed the spirit, although she really needed no such adventitious support, she said.

"All right," commented Jenks. "If you don't want a drink, I do."

"I can quite believe it," she retorted. "Your case is very different. I knew the men would not leave after the first shock of their appearance had passed, I mean. I also knew that you would save me. Now you, Mr. Jenks, had to do the fighting. You were called upon to rescue precious me. Good gracious! No wonder you were excited."

The sailor mentally expressed his inability to grasp the complexities of feminine nature, but Iris rattled on:

"I carried my tin of water to the pitcher plant and was listening to the greedy roots gurgling away for dear life when suddenly four men sprang out from among the trees and seized my arms before I could reach my revolver."

"Thank heaven you failed!"

"You think that if I had fired at them they would have retaliated. Yes, especially if I had hit the chief. But it was he who instantly gave some order, and I suppose it meant that they were not to hurt me. As a matter of fact, they seemed to be quite as much astonished as I was alarmed. But if they could hold my hands they could not stop my voice so readily. Oh, didn't I yell?"

"You did."

"I suppose you could not hear me distinctly?"

"Quite distinctly."

"Every word?"

"Yes."

She bent to pick some leaves and bits of dry grass from her dress. "Well, you know," she continued rapidly, "in such moments one cannot choose one's words. I just shouted the first thing that came into my head."

"And I," he said, "picked up the first rifle I could lay my hands on. Now, Miss Deane, as the affair has ended so happily, may I venture to ask you to remain in the cave until I return?"

"Oh, please"—she began.

"Really, I must insist. I would not leave you if it were not quite imperative. You cannot come with me."

Then she understood one at least of the tasks he must perform, and she meekly obeyed.

He thought it best to go along Turtle beach to the cove and thence follow the Dyaks' trail through the wood, as this line of advance would entail practically a complete circuit of the island. He omitted no precautions in his advance. Often he stopped and listened intently. Whenever he doubled a point or passed among the trees he crept back and peered along the way he had come to see if any hostile foes were breaking shelter behind him.

The marks on the sand proved that only one sampan had been beached. Thence he found nothing of special interest until he came upon the chief's gun lying close to the trees on the north side. It was a very ornamental weapon, a muzzle loader. The stock was inlaid with gold and ivory, and the piece had evidently been looted from some merchantman's ship surprised and sacked in a former foray.

The lock was smashed by the impact of Jenks' rifle bullet, but close investigation of the trigger guard and the discovery of certain unmistakable evidences on the beach showed that the Dyak leader had lost two if not three fingers of his left hand.

"So he has something more than his passion to nurse," mused Jenks. "That, at any rate, is fortunate. He will be in no mood for further enterprise for some time to come."

He dreaded lest any of the Dyaks should be only badly wounded and likely to live. It was a great relief to his nerves to find that the improvised dumdums had done their work too well to permit anxiety on that score.

He gathered the guns, swords and cresses of the slain, with all their uncouth belts and ornaments. In pursuance of a vaguely defined plan of future action he also divested some of the men of their coarse garments and collected six queer looking hats shaped like inverted basins. These things he placed in a heap near the pitcher plants. Thenceforth for half an hour the placid surface of the lagoon was disturbed by the black dorsal fins of many sharks.

His guess at the weather conditions heralded by the change of wind was right. As the two parts of their evening meal the complaining surf lashed the reef, and the tremulous branches of the taller trees voiced the approach of a gale. A tropical storm—not a typhoon, but a belated burst of the periodic rains—deluged the island before midnight. Hours earlier Iris retired, utterly worn by the events of the day. The gale chanted a wild melody in mournful chords, and the noise of the watery downpour on the tarpaulin roof of Delly Vue castle was enough to render conversation impossible save in wearying shouts.

Jenks' carpentry was effective, though rough. The building was water tight, and he had calked every crevice with unraveled rope until Iris' apartment was free from the tiniest draft.

The very fury of the external turmoil acted as a lullaby to the girl. She was soon asleep, and the sailor was left to his thoughts.

Sleep he could not. He smoked steadily, with a magnificent prodigality, for his small stock of tobacco was fast diminishing. He ransacked his brains to discover some method of escape from this enchanted island, where fairies jostled with demons and hours of utter happiness found their bane in moments of frightful peril.

Of course he ought to have killed those fellows who escaped. Their sampan might have provided a last desperate expedient if other savages effected a landing. Well, there was no use in being wise after the event, and, scheme as he might, he could devise no way to avoid disaster during the next attack.

This, he felt certain, would take place at night. The Dyaks would land in force, rush the cave and hut and overpower him by sheer numbers. The fight, if fight there was, would be sharp, but decisive. Perhaps if he retold her about the ledge and explained his half formed notion that here they might defend the entrance in case of further attack, a refuge from which they might defy assault during many days. It was, he said, absolutely impossible to wait until the morning. He must at once satisfy himself whether the project was impracticable or worthy of further investigation.

So the girl only enabled him to be careful, and he vigorously renewed the climb. At last, some twenty-five feet from the ground on the accidental parting in the branches enabled him to get a good look at the ledge. One glance set his heart beating joyously. It was at least fifteen feet in length. It sheltered back until its depth was lost in the blackness of the shadows, and the floor must be either nearly level or sloping slightly downward to the line of the fault.

The place was a perfect eagle's nest. A chamois could not reach it from any direction. It became accessible to man only by means of a ladder or a balloon.

More excited by this discovery than he cared for Iris to know, he endeavored to appear unconcerned when he regained the ground.

"Well," she said, "tell me all about it."

He described the nature of the cavity as well as he understood it at the moment and emphasized his previous explanation of its virtues. Here they might reasonably hope to make a successful stand against the Dyaks.

"Then you feel sure that those awful creatures will come back?" she said slowly.

"Only too sure, unfortunately."

"How remorseless poor humanity is when the veneer is stripped off! Why have they leave us in peace? Perhaps if I had not been here they would not have injured you. Somehow I seem to be bound up with your misfortunes."

"You could not have it otherwise were it in my power," he answered. For an instant he left unchallenged the girl's assumption that she was in any way responsible for the disasters which had broken up his career. He looked into her eyes and almost forgot himself. There the sense of fair dealing that dominates every true gentleman rose within him and gripped his wavering emotions with ruthless force. Was this a time to play upon the high strung sensibilities of this youthful daughter of the gods, to seek to win from her a confession of love that a few brief days or weeks might prove to be only a spasmodic but momentarily all powerful gratitude for the protection he had given her?

He spoke aloud, striving to laugh, lest his words should falter:

"You can console yourself with the thought, Miss Deane, that your presence on the island will in no way affect my fate at the hands of the Dyaks. Had they caught me unprepared today the head would now be covered with a solution of the special varnish they carry on every foreign expedition."

"And yet these men are human beings!"

"For purposes of classification, yes. Keeping to strict fact, it was lucky for me that you raised the alarm and gave me a chance to discount the odds of mere numbers. So, you see, you really did me a good turn."

"What can be done now to save our lives? Anything will be better than to await another attack."

"The first thing to do is to try to get some sleep before daylight. How did you know I was not in the castle?"

"I cannot tell you. I awoke and knew you were not near me. If I wake in the night I can always tell whether or not you are in the next room. So I dressed and came out."

"Ah!" he said quietly. "Evidently I snore."

Iris retreated, and the sailor, tired out at last, managed to close his weary eyes.

Next morning he hastily constructed a pole of sufficient length and strong enough to bear his weight by tying two sturdy young trees together with ropes. Iris helped him to raise it against the face of the precipice, and he at once climbed to the ledge.

Here he found his observations of the previous night abundantly verified. The ledge was even wider than he dared to hope, nearly ten feet deep in one part, and it sloped sharply downward from the outer lip of the rock. By lying flat and carefully testing all points of view he ascertained that the only possible approach from which even a glimpse of the interior floor could be obtained were the branches of a few tall trees and the extreme right of the opposing precipice, nearly ninety yards distant. There was ample room to store water and provisions, and he quickly saw that even some sort of shelter from the fierce rays of the sun and the otherwise piercing cold of the night might be achieved by judiciously rigging up a tarpaulin.

"This is a genuine bit of good luck," he mused. "Here, provided neither of us is hit, we can hold out for a week or longer at a pinch. How can it be possible that I should have lived on this island so many days and yet hit upon this spot of safety by mere chance, as it were?"

Not until he reached the level again could he solve the puzzle. Then he perceived that the way in which the cliff bulged out on both sides prevented the ledge from becoming evident in profile, while, seen in the glare of the sunlight, it suggested nothing more than a slight indentation.

He rapidly sketched to Iris the defensive plan which the eagle's nest suggested. Access must be provided by means of a rope ladder, securely fastened inside the ledge and capable of being pulled up or let down at the will of the occupants. Then the place must be kept constantly stocked with a judicious supply of provisions, water and ammunition. They could be covered with a tarpaulin and thus kept in fairly good condition.

"We ought to sleep there every night," he went on, and his mind was so engrossed with the tactical side of the preparations that he did not notice how Iris blanched at the suggestion.

"Surely not until danger actually threatens?" she cried.

"Danger threatens us each hour after sunset. It may come any night, though I expect at least a fortnight's reprieve. Nevertheless I intend to act as if to-night may witness the first shot of the siege."

"Do you mean that?" she sighed. "And little room is becoming so very cozy!"

Jenks always accepted her words literally.

"Well," he announced, after a pause, "it may not be necessary to take up our quarters there until the eleventh hour. Neither I nor Iris need carry stores and made the ladder I will endeavor to devise an efficient cordon of sentinels around our position. We will see."

Not another word could Iris get out of him on the topic. Indeed, he provided her with plenty of work. By this time she could splice a rope more neatly than her tutor, and her particular business was to prepare no less than sixty fathoms of the rope ladder. This was an impossible task for one day, but after dinner the sailor helped her. They toiled late, until their fingers were sore and their backbones creaked as they sat upright.

Meanwhile Jenks swarmed up the pole again and drew up after him a crowbar, the ship's hammock and a pickax. With these implements he set to work to improve the accommodation. Of course he did not attempt seriously to remove any large quantity of rock, but there were projecting lumps here and inequalities of floor there which could be thumped or pounded out of existence.

It was surprising to see what a clearance he made in an hour. The existence of the fault helped him a good deal, as the moisture of the water at this point had oxidized the stone to rottenness. To his great joy he discovered that the iron prods with the pick laid bare a small cavity which could be easily enlarged. Here he contrived a niche where Iris could remain in absolute safety, and here, protected by stores, while, with a squeeze, she was entirely sheltered from the one dangerous point on the opposite cliff, nor need she be seen from the trees.

Having hauled into position two boxes of ammunition—for which he had scooped out a special receptacle—the inevitable water kegs from the stranded boat, several tins of biscuits and all the tinned meats, together with three bottles of wine and two of brandy, he hastily advanced to the task and busied himself with fitting a number of gunlocks to heavy fagots.

All these preparations proceedings in silence for some time. At last the arrival for luncheon enabled her to demand an explanation.

"I am going to use at once what you intend to do with those strange implements," she said, "I will go on strike."

"If you do," he answered, "you will create a precedent."

"I withdraw the threat and substitute a more genuine plea—curiosity," she cried.

"Then you will be gratified promptly. These are our sentinels. Come with me to that big post to the most distant one."

He picked up a fagot with its queer attachment, shouldered a rifle and smiled when Iris slung a revolver belt over her shoulder.

They started rapidly to Smuggler's cove, and the girl soon perceived the ingenuity of his automatic signal. He securely bound the block of wood to a tree trunk with cords from the undergrowth. Breaking the bullet out of a cartridge, he placed the blank charge in position in front of the hammer, the cock being held back by a fine line of twine. To the trigger, the spring of which he had eased to a slight pressure, he attached a piece of unraveled rope. Then he carefully trailed it among the trees at a height of six inches from the ground, using as carriers nails driven into the trunks.

The ultimate result was that a mere swish of Iris' dress against the taut cord exploded the cartridge.

"Perfect!" he exclaimed exultantly. "When I have placed a couple of bags of sand to the water's edge on both sides of the cove, I will defy them to land by night without giving us warning."

There is no disputing the fact that man's heart is often reached through the stomach. Happy the housewife who can please her husband's appetite with well cooked food for the table. Many a man is grouchy, ugly, nervous, suffering from distress after eating, heart palpitation, and all through the overworked stomach.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which helps the digestion of food in the stomach, assists the blood in taking up the proper elements from the food, helps the liver into activity, thereby throwing out the poisons in the blood and vitalizing the whole system. This assimilation helps in the oxidation of the red blood corpuscles, the poisons in the system are eliminated, the heart gets the right kind of blood and the person feels invigorated and stronger in consequence. As a tissue builder it is far preferable to cod liver oil or any alcoholic compounds or tonics, because it gives the blood and the tissues the food elements they require and maintains a person's nutrition by enabling him to eat, retain, digest and assimilate nutritious food. It overcomes the gastric irritability and symptoms of indigestion. Because of the good effects from using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery upon nutrition and the building up of the tissues, scrofula, consumption, weakness or debility and symptoms of fever, night-sweats, headaches, etc., disappear.

"I believe that it is practically conceded that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the best medicine for man to take suffering from indigestion, kidney trouble or any of the ailments resulting from the use or neglecting a cold," writes J. Russell Hill of 9 Charlotte Street, Kingston, Ontario, Canada. "Dr. Pierce's Imperial Knights' Federation League of Honor. I have used it several times during the past few years and have always found that it gave me immediate relief. It expels poisonous uric acid in the system, due to improper digestion, relieves the kidneys from congestion, drives headache and backache away, induces appetite and tones up the general system. I consider it a fine remedy for young or old men, sure to build up a run-down condition of the system."

"Do you know," said Iris, in all seriousness, "I think you are the cleverest man in the world."

He was manifestly pleased by the success of his ingenious contrivance and forthwith completed the cordon. To make doubly sure he set another snare farther within the trees. He was certain the Dyaks would not pass along Turtle beach if they could help it. By this time the light was failing.

"That will suffice for the present," he told the girl. "Tomorrow we will place other sentries in position at strategic points where we can sleep in the castle with tolerable safety."

By the meager light of the tiny lamp they labored sedulously at the rope ladder until Iris' eyes were closing with sheer weariness. Neither of them had slept much during the preceding night, and they were both completely tired.

The first streaks of dawn were tipping the opposite crags with roseate tints when the sailor was suddenly aroused by what he believed to be a gunshot. He could not be sure. He was still collecting his scattered senses, and straining eyes and ears intensely, when there came a second report.

Then he knew what had happened. The sentries on the Smugglers' cove post were faithful to their trust. The enemy was upon them.

At such a moment Jenks was not a man who erred. Indeed, he was prone to invoke the nether powers, a habit long since acquired by the British army—in Flanders, it is believed.

The sentries on the summit must be lost. He rushed into Iris' room and gathered her in his arms. He explained to the girl as he ran with her to the foot of the rock that she must cling to his shoulders with unfaltering courage while he climbed to the ledge with the aid of the pole and the rope placed there the previous day. It was a magnificent feat of strength that he essayed. In calmer moments he would have shrunk from its performance if only on the score of danger to the precious burden he carried. Now there was no time for thought. Up he went, hand over hand, clinging to the rough pole with the tenacity of a limpet and taking a turn of the rope over his right wrist at each upward clutch. At last, breathless, but triumphant, he reached the ledge and was able to grasp his instructions to Iris to crawl over his bent back and head until she was safely lodged on the broad platform of rock.

Up he went, hand over hand.

Then before she could expostulate he descended, this time for the rifles. These he hastily slung to the rope, again swarmed up the pole and drew the guns after him with infinite care.

"Now we are ready for them," he growled, lying prone on the ledge and eagerly scanning both sides of Prospect park for a first glimpse of their assailants.

For two shivering hours they waited there until the sun was high over the cliff and filled sea and land with its brightness. At last, despite the girl's tears and prayers, Jenks insisted on making a reconnaissance in person.

Let this portion of their adventures be passed over with merciful brevity. Both watch guns had been fired by a troop of the tame monkeys. Iris did not know whether to laugh or cry, when Jenks, with much difficulty, lowered her to Mother Earth again and marveled the while how he had managed to carry forty feet into the air a young woman who weighed so solidly.

They sat down to a belated breakfast, and Jenks then became conscious that the muscles of his arms, legs and back were aching hugely. It was by no means the first time he had felt the true extent of his achievement.

CHAPTER IX.

THE sailor went after those monkeys in a most unmerciful severity. Thus far the regular denizens of Rainbow Island had dwelt together in peace and mutual good will. The similarity of two-wou-wou must be taught not to pull any strings he found that promiscuously to tease or stakes. As a preliminary Jenks resolved to try force combined with strifice. Failing complete success, he would endeavor to kill every monkey in the place, though he had in full measure the inherent dislike of Anglo-India to the slaying of the tree people.

This, then, is what he did: After filling a biscuit tin with good sized pebbles he donned a Dyak hat, blouse and belt, rubbed earth over his face and hands and proceeded to pelt the woo-wous mercilessly. For more than an hour he made their lives miserable until at the mere sight of him they fled, shrieking and gurgling like a thousand water bottles. Finally he constructed several Dyak scarecrows and erected one to guard each of his alarm guns. The device was thoroughly effective. Thenceforth, when some adventurous monkey, swinging with hands or tail among the treetops in the morning search for appetizing nut or luscious plantain, saw one of those fearsome sail cloth dunes, and such a hubbub that all his companions scampered hastily from the confines of the wood to the inner fastnesses.

During each of the two daily examinations of the horizon, which he never omitted, Jenks minutely scrutinized the sea between Rainbow Island and the distant group. It was perhaps a needless precaution. The Dyaks would come at night. With a favorable wind they need not start until dusk, and their fleet sampans would easily cover the intervening forty miles in five hours.

He could not be positive that they were actual inhabitants of the islands to the south. The China sea swarms with wandering pirates, and the tribe whose animosity he had earned might be equally noxious to some peaceable fishing community on the coast. Again and again he debated the advisability of constructing a seaworthy raft and endeavoring to make the passage. But this would be risking all on a frightful uncertainty, and the accidental discovery of the eagle's nest had given him new hope. Here he could make a determined and prolonged stand, and in the end help must come. So he dismissed the navigation project and devoted himself wholly to the perfecting of the natural fortress in the rock.

That night they finished the rope ladder. Indeed Jenks was determined not to retire to rest until it was placed. He did not care to try a second time to carry Iris to that elevated perch.

One of the first things he contemplated was the destruction if possible of the pinnacle on the opposite cliff which commanded the ledge. This, however, was utterly impracticable with the appliances at his command. The top of the rock sloped slightly toward the west, and nothing short of dynamite or regular quarrying operations would render it untenable by hostile marksmen.

During the day his rifles at ninety yards' range might be trusted to keep the place clear of intruders. But at night—that was the difficulty. He partially solved it by fixing two rests on the ledge to support a rifle in exact line with the center of the enemy's supposed position, and on the outer rest he marked lines which corresponded with other sections of the entire front of the beach. The Even then he was not satisfied. When time permitted, he made many experiments with ropes revved through the pulley and attached to a rifle trigger. He might have succeeded in his main object had not his thoughts taken a new line. His aim was to achieve some method of operating and closing the breech block by means of two ropes. The difficulty was to secure the preliminary and final lateral movement of the lever bolt, but it suddenly occurred to him that if he could manage to convey the impression that Iris and he had left the island the Dyaks would go away after a fruitless search. The existence of ropes along the face of the rock—an essential to his mechanical scheme—would betray their whereabouts at once to the most cursory curiosity. So he reluctantly abandoned his original design, though not wholly, as will be seen in due course.

In pursuance of the latest idea he sedulously removed from the foot of the cliff all traces of the clearance made on the ledge, and, although he provided supports for the rope handle, he did not adjust it. Iris and he might lie perdu there for days without either retreat being found out. This development suggested the necessity of hiding their surplus stores and ammunition, and what spot could be more beautiful than a hole in the rock?

So Jenks began to dig once more in the interior, laboring manfully with pick and shovel in the vicinity of the fault with its vein of antimony.

Rainbow Island had given him the one thing a man prizes above all else—a pure yet passionate love for a woman's beautiful face in body and soul. Now it was to endow him with riches that might stir the pulse of even a South African magnate, for—the self-confessed hero of adventure—he was providing the requisite cache, shoveling and delving with the energy peculiar to all his actions, suddenly struck a deep vein of almost pure gold.

To be continued.

"It's certainly true," said the moralist, "that it is more blessed to receive for himself nobody else will have much regard for you."

"But it's equally true," replied Wise, "that it is too much nobody else will have any."

"Our cashier," said the bank president, "has recently acquired a half interest in a trotting horse."

"Well," rejoined the vice-president, "he's got a right to do as he pleases with his own money, hasn't he?"

"Yes, but he pleases with other people's money, too."

"Dear George has only one fault," said the bride of three short weeks, "and that is a very slight failing."

"That fault," rejoined her elder sister, who had been with us during the honeymoon game for better or worse, "will gradually disappear as the honeymoon wanes."

"Oh, dear!" sighed the bride, "I was in hopes it would last forever."

TYPHOID CAN BE WIPED OUT.

"Wherever you find a death from typhoid, some one ought to be charged for murder," a distinguished sanitarian has said. This is a violent statement, but there is forcible proof of its justice in an article by Samuel Hopkins Adams, in the June McClure's.

"Typhoid, the Unnecessary Evil," is the whole interesting story of this disease which costs American communities so many millions of dollars and so many thousand lives. It tells the results of a far-reaching and search ng investigation, showing conclusively the criminal foolishness of permitting it in any community.

The average city of 100,000 inhabitants wastes, perhaps, half a million dollars a year on the luxury of having typhoid, and probably a hundred shous and dollars more in efforts to avoid it. That amount of money, properly spent, would practically do away with it. "What we have seen it done in the principal European cities; yet, with the unprogressiveness in matters of public health which so strangely contrasts with the forwarding American spirit, our cities have continued to pocket themselves and each other." The story of the fight against infection, the triumphs of scientific methods and the ignorance and neglect which turns cesspools of communities into a progressive cause of poisoning data which prick the skin of the horses with so many paralyze the r muscles with a drug that kills very quickly, is told all permanently, and does not injure the horses at all.

The exhibition given by the professor of very remarkable, the most vicious runaway horse from Peter Woodward and hitched it to a buggy and then, seating himself in the buggy, with a gun in place, he would put the horse into a run on Main street and then there at the time put the ground. The horse is a large, powerful animal, and can with ease outspeed for a hundred feet or more. Then the professor reached forward, took up the gun and shot two of the little darts into the horse which staggered forward a few steps and then stood standing upright but with muscles relaxed and head drooping. In one about ten minutes before he recovered, and then he was as wild and vicious as ever.

THE EARLIEST LOVE LETTER.

A French paper records the discovery of what is said to be the oldest love letter in the world. It was written on a brick, about 2200 B.C., by Babylonian to a lady living at the two Rivers—a city known to readers of the Old Testament as Sepharvaim. The lover's name was Gimil, and he writes as follows to Kashuya—a word that means a lamb, "May the sun of Marduk give these eternal ills. I would gain know if thy health is good. Send me a message so that I may be comforted. I am at Babylon and cannot see thee, and therefore am very anxious. Send me a message to tell me when thou will come, so that my heart may rejoice. Come in the October-November month. Marvat thee live long, so that I may enjoy thy love."

Flexibility. That goes for toward service giving. There isn't a day that we'd keep out of trouble—or keep you out — if we were tied by rule or precedent. We have rules, but they shall not rasp you.

Our business is to sell you what you choose from our stocks—and to make delivery with as little delay and annoyance as possible to you.

A Cool Spring Has Brought Many Bargains to Our Wash Goods Section

Wholesale houses and mills got scared and unloaded stocks at sacrifice prices. Our own stock was not too heavy, and we bought many lines at less than it cost to make them. We have placed them right in stock for immediate selling. The special bargains are sprinkled all through the wash goods section. We mention just a few—

LINEN HOMESPUN AND REPPS FOR OUTING AND HOLIDAY WEAR. In one of our windows now is a lot of Homespuns and Repps, all at one price—20c yard. You will recognize many lines worth 35c yard.

WHITE DAMASKS. Small mercerized spots in all white—the kind you expect to pay a quarter for—for 15c yard.

BAREGE VOILE—An exact imitation of all wool seventy-five cent goods, woven without a particle of dressing, would be cheap at 40c yard, special price 25c yard.

Outing and Boating Headwear in the Millinery Department.

EETACHABLE WASHABLE TAM-O'SHANTERS. Tops are removable for washing. Just the thing for girls' outing wear for the next three months—made from White P.K., Satin Cords, White and Colored Linens, 25c, 40c and 50c.

BIG TOP TAM-O'SHANTERS—Another favorite for boating and outing—25c to 50c.

WHITE AUTOMOBILE CAPS—Large crown, with peak, 4 sc.

CHILDREN'S SAILOR HATS. We are showing a fine array of them, starting as low as 20c, and much variety up to $2.00.

Phyllis.

Is the new foundation collar form that is washable. You may have seen it advertised in the American magazines. White, all sizes, 12 1-2 to 14 1-2—10c each.

For Very Large Women

In making our purchases for the different departments we always pay particular attention to the wants of big women. For instance in the Hosiery Department we have the extra outside sizes in Cotton and Cashmere Hose. In the Underwear Department we have the Undervests with Drawers to match, extra outside sizes. In the Jacket stock are sizes 42 and 42 inches. Fabric Gloves, 5, 5 1-2, 6, 6 1-2, 7, 7 1-2, 8 and 8 1-2. Kid Gloves, 6, 7, 7 1-2, 7 3-4 and 8 sizes. Black Silk Belts, 30 to 33 inches. Linen Collars, 14 1-2 to 18 inches. Corsets up to 33 size.

Another Raincoat Bargain for Women.

This store is the biggest outlet for goods in this part of the country. We can often handle quantities that would cripple smaller people. We usually have first chance at snaps going that are worth the having. Another big lot of sample rain coats came our way this week. We are selling them to you at about a saving of one-fourth to one third. It's buying opportunities like this that makes so much extra business for us

Ladies' Linen Tub Coats.

Linen Tub Coats is what they call the new Summer Coat, that the American trade is going in so heavy for now. We have prepared for the demand with a fine lot of Linen stuffs, such as Linen Homespuns, Colored Mercerised Linen, Butchers Linen etc. Five to eight yards makes the fashionable coat. The style is absolutely correct.

Men's, Youth's and Children's Suits.

Three Hundred Suits have come to us at great reductions. The make and stuff are standard—the bargains are very real. A great many have asked us during the last week "How is it that you can make such big reductions" Our answer to you all is that the manufacturer (W. E. Sanford Mfg. Co.) was willing to lose money in order to clear the stock of all lines of which they only had a few suits and no more cloth of the same kind to make up. That means that these Suits belong to lines that have been remarkably good sellers this year, and to clear are now very low in price.

Men's $7.50 and $8.50 Suits for $5.
Men's $10.00 Suits for $7.50.
Men's $12 50 Suits for $8.50 and $10.
Men's $13.50 and $15 Suits for $10, $11.
Men's $17.50 Suits for $12.50.

Boy's Norfolk Suits about 1-3 off.
Boys 3 Piece Suit 25 per cent less than usual
Men's $12 50 Rain Coats for $10.
Men's $10 Rain Coats for $7.50.

ANAPANEE.

"A nap Annie"! It is always that way when we camp here. You are always sleepy in this place." "When you should be up and away to your traps you say, 'Let me have a nap, Annie'" So spoke Annie Latelle to her indolent spouse. She evidently believed he was lazier, in this place, than in other localities. Continuing, she said, mimicking the French accent, "You call this place, 'Place' every one de revair tonga' de camp, act 'I'll call it 'A nap Annie,' what you always say here." Thus Anapanee got its name. It was only in recent years the "A" was dropped, leaving the present form—Napanee.

There are some people who think that a soporific influence still vaoues the place, for fear of being considered facetious I will not mention the six churches and the snoring of the jails as seasons, but the fact that the sinners are not lighted after 9 o'clock is somewhat significant.

While many towns prevent disfigurement of their natural and architectual beauties, by advertisements, Napanee seems not to have opened her eyes upon the subject. The old covered bridge of itself is ornamental. It is rendered hideous by advertisements. A beautiful elm is smashed, by a large yellow board, nailed to its trunk, with "C'mon a shredded excelsior bun," badly printed thereon.

As an example of this atmosphenoent condition, recently a wide awake Chicago advertiser was allowed to put two ugly signs on each telegraph pole along the business part of Dundas street.

Though the date May 25th, is in there in large type on each sign, they are still standing. A telegraph pole at best is not ornamental, but covered with tin and paper advertisements it is much worse.

It will be noticed that the Bell and Bell Telephone Co. do not allow their property to be disfigured by advertisements.

Perhaps we are well as critics, it may be mentioned that there has been a great improvement in the appearance of the town during the last few years.

The streets are cleaner, not so much refuse paper blowing about, trees, shrubs, better walks, lawns, etc. Action upon the matter of disfiguring public property would be another step in the right direction.

AN AXLE BROKE.

A party of three gentlemen came to grief on Amherstview hill near Morven last Tuesday afternoon. They were driving along at a lively clip, when an axle broke and all were unceremoniously thrown out. They were coming from Montreal on their way to Toronto. Mr. C. A. Anderson was telephoned for and brought the party to Napanee, who took the train for their destination that afternoon. The auto was left in the ditch and its owner in Toronto was notified, who is expected to take it away to-day. Fortunately no one was hurt, although some of their clothes were torn.

TO LEARN WAR NO MORE

SERMON WHICH VOICES LONGINGS OF ALL THOUGHTFUL MEN.

OF THE UNIVERSAL PEACE

Agencies Which Are Working For the Early Realization of Its Promise—Man Must Be Taught the Art of Peace, As They Have Been Taught the Science of War—Work Is Being Done.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dixey, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., May 28.—This Memorial day sermon voices the longing of all thoughtful men and women throughout the world for the early realization of the promise of universal peace and welcomes the agencies that are now at work for that purpose. The text is Isaiah ii. 4, "Neither shall they learn war any more."

Every great catastrophe is an inspiration for overcoming or at least for lessening danger. No sooner did the awful conflicts last along upon the theatre take place in December, 1904, than the whole city of Chicago began its process of purification. Denunciations appeared in all the daily newspapers. Editors as well as people declared "No fire trap like that had a right to exist." At once there was a scurrying about of the city officials. The fire regulations were overhauled. The means for fighting fire were increased. The fire inspectors were clearly and emphatically told that hereafter there was to be no evading of the fire laws and of the building restrictions. The will of the people plainly said, "The horror of the past through criminal negligence of the city officials shall not become the horror of the future."

What is true in reference to fire catastrophes is also true about railroad accidents. The tragedy of the Tay bridge in old Scotland strengthened the abutments of many bridges in many lands. The terrific annual slaughter of human life on the railroads of our own country was the cause of creating the block system, the Westinghouse brake and the automatic coupling whereby car can be joined to car without endangering the body of brakemen or other railroad employe. So the awful tragedy of the civil war, with its million dead, ought to be an inspiration to teach us not only how we should honor the soldiers who fought and bled and died, but also how we should honor those who are living, to prevent such a horrible butchery of human life in the future.

As man has to be taught the art of war, so he must learn the art of peace. Shall he not honor the professors who are teaching him how to cover the valleys with houses and factories and schools and churches instead of with campfires and fortresses and burning towns? Shall we not honor those who are teaching us how to change our plains of Esdraelon into "cities of habitation" which shall be populous in many wars? Shall we not honor today such teachers as Prof. R. G. Holden of Iowa State Agricultural College, who in 1904 gave to the farmers of the west a certain kind of corn seed which would produce a better kind of corn in that region than the farmers had been able to grow and thereby in one year put into the western farmers' pockets $50,000,000 more than had ever been there before? Shall we not honor such a one as well as we honor the soldier who teaches the Iowa boy how to march and how to shoot and how to slay his brother?

This subject which we are about to discuss is one which is uppermost today in the minds and hearts of many. "It has occurred to me recently," wrote a dear friend from the east, "that a good subject for a sermon at some early day would be 'Peace' and the movements being made for the preservation of the world's peace. Now that the statue of Frederick the Great has been set up in Washington it is seriously proposed to supplement it with the statues of Cæsar, Napoleon and Hannibal. This may be a war college idea. I do not know who made the suggestion, but it is a little unfair to the true spirit of the age, which is one of peace and arbitration. Instead of glorifying the great conquerors of nations we might do well to emulate the South American republics of Chile and Argentina, which have entered into mutual arbitration compacts, melted their cannon and set up a statue of the Christ on a peak of the Andes as the bringer of peace to the world." That letter has in it the true ring of the gospel and of the best Christian statesmanship. Peace is the one thing we need all, to honor the dead soldier to-day in the best of all ways by teaching mankind to honor the goodness and the moral agencies that are at work to prevent future wars!

The dead soldier of the civil war in the first place should teach us that the statesmen who ought to be most respected in American politics is not necessarily the man who is elected to office, but the man who would sooner be defeated for advocating a just principle than elected, for advocating a wrong one. He should teach us that a Jeroboam in exile may be more of a true friend to his country than a Rehoboam, the heir apparent to a throne. A publicly denounced and disgraced Queen Vashti is infinitely to be preferred to a Jezebel holding in her right hand the signet ring of a reigning king. He should teach us that a peasant L'Ouverture fighting for the liberation of his beloved Hayti and dying in the dark dungeon of a French prison or a William Wallace foully executed in London are infinitely better patriots for Scotland or an Oliver Cromwell endangering his life by denouncing the tyrannies of King Charles is to be more honored infinitely above the apostates who sell their wealth or fame to betray their honor and their principles and betrayed their country's rights. And yet, strange to say, often does a contemporary estimate a statesman's successes not by the fealty with which he guards her honor but by his ability to "look out for self into office, no matter what means he may use to attain it.

It is not this fact absolutely true in reference to Napoleon Bonaparte? He was not only honored when he was alive, but he was and is honored by the French people and by the world when he is dead. Never was there a more splendid funeral than that which brought his dust back from St. Helena to sleep its last sleep upon the banks of the river Seine. The son of the king whom Napoleon had dethroned went from his exile in Austria to bring the honored burden from British soil. "England took the eagle and Austria the eaglet," were the words Victor Hugo wrote to poetically describe the English imprisonment of Napoleon I. and of Napoleon II. after the abdication of the little King of Rome. Yet in what way did Napoleon benefit France? Did he leave her more peace or her strength or her honor? No. He was simply great as a murderer, great as a conqueror, great as a merciless tyrant. He made wars; he levied taxes; he led his people to the slaughter merely for the sake of his ambisement. He crushed the members of his own home under his iron heel for his own convenience when it suited him. He banqueted year after year upon the sufferings and agonies of his people and cared not how many were wished and bled as long as Napoleon's standards were in the fore and Napoleon's throne was lifted higher, even though it was remorselessly raised upon a pile of corpses.

Shall Napoleon Bonaparte be honored above Stephen Langton, who wrested from King John Magna Charta and made the English people a nation of kings? Shall he be honored above Martin Luther, the single handed and alone, defied the temporal authority of Christendom and the spiritual also in the opening wedge which will ultimately everywhere separate church from state? Shall he be honored above that wonderful assemblage of men who, under the leadership of Thomas Jefferson, wrote the Declaration of Independence, and of James Madison who penned the constitution of the United States, under the man in a republican form of government is compelled to respect the rights of man? Shall he be honored infinitely above that of Abraham Lincoln, who was born in a hut, lived for the most part of his life upon a wretched farm and yet by the proclamation of emancipation taught the world that all men upon the North American continent are free and equal?

All wars, both civil and international, are caused by injustice. The statesman who works to make right might, who labors to have every man bear more heavily upon one class than upon another class, who struggles to give "all square deal" to the poor man as well as to the rich—that man is a prince of future carnage. That man is a preventer of future carnage. That man is teaching the world that each nation must respect the rights of other nations, that one social class must respect the rights of other social classes and that all people are independent and must learn to respect the independence of others. May God bless to-day the Christian statesmen who are not merely for their nation but all people, in their own and other lands!

The just ruler or statesman is a preventer of future war. Yes, but in this eulogy of the "heroes of peace" the schoolhouse must be built alongside of the legislative halls. No people in any land will ever be safe against war or making unjust wars unless at the schoolhouse desk their eyes have been opened to intelligent views, and they have become deaf to the calls of the demagogue and their minds have been developed to do their own thinking. A safe nation is not built upon the autocracy of a throne. It is not anchored upon the rock of a liberal constitution. It is dependent upon the intelligence and the wisdom of the people, the common people, who associate themselves together with a government, be it a monarchy, an oligarchy or a republic.

Let me illustrate this idea from the history of some of our southern republics. I used to think that the form of the United States Government was the cause of most of our national troubles. That is not true. As I turn to these republics of South America I find that most of them were patterned after our own constitution. What is the result? A noted English writer declares that, though there have been within late years $50 different instances of constitutional government started, most of them have been dead failures. In the Bolivian republic alone out of fourteen consecutive presidents three-quarters of them were murdered or have died in exile. The history of most of the South American republics of the United States constitution has been merely a long series of wars between the military chieftains for supremacies, governmental convulsion after convulsion, revolution after revolution and upheaval after upheaval. What is the cause of all this? It is not due to the form of the South American republic of the United States. It is due to the strong republic to-day because we have strong, intelligent, individual voters.

Has any Government offered greater educational facilities than ours? No sooner did the Puritan settle in old New England than he immediately began to erect his institutions of learning. The pilgrim fathers landed in Plymouth in 1620, yet only sixteen years later, or in 1636, it was that Harvard College was founded in Cambridge on the outskirts of Boston. We find the Dutch and the Scottish settlers drifting down into Connecticut, and what happened? In 1700 Yale College is started in 1701 at Saybrook. 'We go south, and what do we find? Pennsylvania and all the other southern states founding their colleges and academies. We go west, and there institutions of learning are scattered throughout the whole country. Such is seen at almost every crossroad, and the college is interested in nearly every town. Ah, yes, the modern Napoleon would have hard work here to start an international conflict just for fun or to gratify his ambitions. He would have hard work to upset the financially, socially or politically. Why? Because the people of this age in our beloved land have too much intelligence to follow such a leader as the "Little Corsican."

What is the practical application of this thought? Chief among the enduring guarantees of future peace is the presence of our schools and schoolteachers in foreign lands. Too much money cannot be expended upon our public school system. Porto Rico and the Philippines will never be truly conquered for America until American schools have educated those colonists and taught them to realize the meaning of American liberty. That was a very wise move of the United States Government which a few years ago brought the Cuban schoolteachers under the classic walls of old Harvard. Roberts' College in Constantinople and the Presbyterian schools at Beirut are the two wedges which shall overthrow the brutalities of the Turkish Empire. China, through the influence of our missionary schools, shall yet become a gigantic nation, sworn to perpetual peace to forever avert the horrors of another Boxer uprising. And that saintly Government of Russia, made up of many mixed peoples and heterogeneous nationalities, speaking as many different tongues as did the workmen at the tower of Babel, shall yet become one through the missions of peace. Oh, my friends, we cannot be too generous in our public schoolteachers and the professors of our colleges as among the greatest of world builders who are teaching us that war shall be no more!

And here let me state another fact. We not only honor the teachers and professors who have given to us our education, but we also honor men like D. K. Pearson, who with their money have made it possible for this same kind of teachers to carry that education to some who would never be able to get it but for their beneficence. I honor Dr. D. K. Pearson one of the most practical and far reaching philanthropists of this age. He does not take his money and pile it up in some great city university, while the young people can find an education in many other school near at hand, but he gives here and there a few thousand dollars to struggling colleges far out in the country, away from the great centres. He gives there a few thousand dollars and then says, "Gentlemen, you raise in addition to my gift as much as I have given," and in the opening wedge which will ultimately everywhere separate church from state? Shall he be honored above that wonderful assemblage of men who, under the leadership of Thomas Jefferson, wrote the Declaration of Independence, and of James Madison who penned the constitution of the United States, under the man in a republican form of government is compelled to respect the rights of man? Shall he be honored infinitely above that of Abraham Lincoln, who was born in a hut, lived for the most part of his life upon a wretched farm and yet by the proclamation of emancipation taught the world that all men upon the North American continent are free and equal?

All wars, both civil and international, are caused by injustice. PALE FEEBLE GIRLS

A GREAT RESPONSIBILITY RESTS ON MOTHERS OF GROWING GIRLS.

A great and serious responsibility rests upon every mother whose daughter is passing the threshold of girlhood into womanhood. She is at a critical period. She is to be a healthy woman, she must be strong rightly now. She must be pale, sunken-eyed, sallow, languid and bloodless at this time. She must have additional strength and rich, pure blood to help her to strong, healthy womanhood. There is only one absolutely certain way to get new rich, health-giving blood, and that is through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Every pill helps to make rich, life giving blood, that brings strength to every organ in the body and the glow of health to pale, sallow cheeks. Thousands of pale, anaemic girls in all parts of Canada have been made well and strong through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Miss Addison, Hereford, N.S., says:—"As a result of overstudy in school, the health of my daughter, Ellen, became greatly impaired, and for a time she suffered severely from nervous headaches. She had no appetite, and notwithstanding all we did for her in the way of medical treatment, her suffering continued, and I began to feel that her condition was hopeless. Indeed I began to fear her mental powers were failing. Some friends strongly urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. And as I was willing to do anything that might help her I sent to Genoa, N.Y., after using the first few boxes a month, we saw that her vigor was returning, and in less than three months her health was entirely restored. Considering the time that she had been ill for two years, and that doctors' treatment did her not one particle of good, I think her recovery little less than the wonderful merit of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills." Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make, is the whole secret of their great power to cure disease. That is the reason these pills cure anaemia, heart palpitation, headaches and backache, rheumatism, neuralgia, kidney troubles, and a host of diseases due to bad blood and weak nerves. But be sure you get the genuine with the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around each box. If in doubt, write direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and the pills will be sent by mail, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

Looking for Relief from the Fetters of Disease

How many thousands of women there are in this country, bound by the fetters of disease or a run-down condition, who are looking everywhere for relief? Until recently they have had no safe and effective remedy.

They can not get relief from the cure-alls advertised for men and women alike. They do not contain the special ingredients needed for women's peculiar ailments.

It is not to be had either from the liquid preparations. The alcohol may stimulate while being taken, the opium may deaden the symptoms, but neither of these ever give ultimate relief.

Some still seek health from the old preparations of twenty-five years ago, but these are behind the times. Medicine has changed with the times. In nothing has there been greater advancement.

To rid themselves permanently of the fetters of disease, women should take a remedy compounded to meet them alone. It should not contain alcohol nor opium. It should embrace all the medical discoveries to date.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women have all these requisites. They are not like the ordinary medicines.

They are a specific remedy compounded by a specialist for a special purpose.

The specialist is Dr. Hugo of Paris, who probably knows more about the needs of women to-day than any living person. Their special purpose is to cure the ills of women. They are not for men.

They embrace every medical discovery to date, many of which cannot be obtained in any other remedy. They include every known medical ingredient of any value to women.

The needs of the female system in every possible case is supplied by them. They take away that tired feeling, nervousness, and irritability which comes from a run-down condition.

The tablets will cure all menstruation and uterine trouble even when chronic. They take away the backache, constipation, and dragging-down pains which are symptoms of some serious disorder.

A woman would be foolish to go through life with fetters on her wrist, without trying to get rid of them. She is just as foolish to remain fettered by disease or the ills arising from a run-down condition. She don't have to. One box of Health Tablets will prove it.

There are 72 tablets in every box—enough for an extended treatment. The cost is small, the results are great.

Even if other remedies have failed, Dr. Hugo's remedy will not. They make healthy women.

How a Club Went Out of Existence.

Some years ago about a dozen men at Oxford formed a sort of "marriage club." It was agreed that when any member was about to be married a dinner should be held which all within reach should attend—the bachelors to pay. Marriage seemed to agree with them, and the bachelors thought the divided expenses would be inconsiderable. Years passed and now and again the announcement of another marriage was sent around. They met, coming from various walks of life—soldier, barrister, solicitor, journalist, schoolmaster, man about town and the rest—sang the old songs, dug up the old jokes, until one year it happened that the final bachelor found himself sole host. A year later the difficulty arose, and the final bachelor was given his dinner by the eleven married men. And now the friends meet on the anniversaries of their wedding days and pay each his own score. There is perhaps the ideal club.—London Chronicle.

A Delicate Art.

To transfer an old painting to a new canvas is a branch of art that calls for a unison of mechanical skill and talent. There are not many men in the business. It is a most distinct work from renovating a cracked or mutilated painting. Transferring a painting from an old canvas to a new one requires years of experience to accomplish the simplest part of it. After the picture has been removed from its frame several layers of fine tissue paper are pasted firmly across the surface. When the paper is dry the back of the canvas is made thoroughly wet. Thread by thread it is picked away until nothing remains but the paint, which, is fast to the tissue paper. A new canvas is then mounted and glued to the back of the picture. When the glue is dry the tissue paper is moistened and gently removed from the surface. A little cleaning and retouching by a skilled hand make the work complete.

No Bribery.

An amusing episode in politics is vouched for by a minister of religion as having occurred near Gillingham, England. A lady canvasser for one of the local candidates called at a house, found that the voter was out and inquired of the wife, "You think he will vote for my candidate, do you not?"

"Indeed he won't," replied the woman. "He has been promised a new pair of trousers if he votes for the other man."

The lady canvasser assented a petition for bribery, placed a sovereign and said, "I will give you this if you will tell me who made your husband that promise."

"Certainly I will," said the voter's wife as she pocketed the money, "I promised him them myself."

Man and His Necktie.

"Men's taste in neckties," says a New York haberdasher, "is the most fickle thing imaginable. I could never be sure of it. It often happens that a scarf pattern which has a tremendous run for a year or two is reproduced after a few seasons and no one wants to buy it. On the other hand, a design you could hardly give away this year may become the crane next year. Why, no one has ever been able to discover. One year men will revel in red scarfs and the next will have nothing less than a green or purples. Talk about women's taste in dress being uncertain—man's is more so. Outfitters can only guess at it. Experience avails nothing."

The Proofreader's Fault.

In the first edition of St. Matthew in Micmac for the Indians of Nova Scotia the translator found when he came to revise it that in chapter xxiv, 7, instead of "nation shall rise against nation" he had written "a pair of snowshoes shall rise up against a pair of snowshoes." But there was only one letter misplaced, found and corrected (a nation) having been displaced by saookta kumikajik (a snowshoe).—St. James' Gazette.

The Cause of Earthquakes.

When there is an earthquake the Tibetans say an evil spirit is abroad. There are evil spirits. "Some of them are gigantic brutes a mile in height, with tiny mouths which prevent them swallowing even the smallest crumb of any kind of food. Naturally they suffer from hunger, and in their agonized writhings they are the immediate cause of earthquakes."

Well Fumigated.

Some years ago Mark Twain's home in Hartford was invaded with scarlet fever. The disease raged for some weeks, when heroic measures were taken to disinfect the house. "You get a fumigator so strong," said Mark Twain, "that it took all the brass off the door knobs and all the tune out of the piano."

Her Status.

We have no hesitation in saying that Dr. D. D. The World is Full of Pains.—The aches and pains that afflict humanity are many and constant, arising from a multitude of indistinguishable causes, but in the main owing to man's negligence in taking care of his health. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil was the outcome of a universal cry for some specific that would speedily relieve pain, and it has filled its mission to a remarkable degree.

The teacher of a colored school in Washington recently asked a pupil to go to the blackboard and write a sentence containing the word "delight." "Mamma, what would you do if that big wasp in the parlor should get broke'ery free?" inquired Bessie.

"I should whip whoever did it," said Mrs. Banks, giving severely at her little son.

A Cure for Fever and Ague.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are compounded for use in any climate, and they will be found to operate perfectly safe in any latitude. In fever and ague they will correct the secretions and neutralize the poison which has caused the disease. A little calomel may be required by a skilled hand make the work complete.

Just the Thing That's Wanted.—A girl that acts upon the stomach and liver is so compounded that certain ingredients of it preserve their power to act upon the intestinal canals, so as to clear them of excreta, the retention of which would but be to poison the system. This is looked for by the medical profess on it. It is found in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are the result of much experience and study, and scientifically prepared as a laxative and an alterative in one.

Professor Henry Smith, famous in his day for his brilliancy, pronounced Poughkeepsie to be the greatest name in the two, for this reason, "A judge, at the most, can only say, 'You be hanged,' whereas a bishop can say, 'You be damned.'" "Yes," said Dr. Jowett, "but the judge says, 'You be hanged,' you are hanged."

She Found a Difference.

A Buffalo Lady says.—Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill differs from the old meth ods in Medicine as day from night.

Mrs. J. H. Rehorn, of 160 Landon Ave., Buffalo, N.Y., says of Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill—the Great System Treatment:

"Your action is so different to anything else I ever used—Anti-Pill is so mild and gentle that I never thought it would cure my chronic Constipation, but it did.

"Soon after the birth of my first child, 4 years ago, Constipation became troublesome. I used everything short of, but temporary relief only did all I got. I must have used fifty different remedies in that time.

"I finally got very bad and at times I would have to use the Clyster, and now what I did not would distress me dreadfully. I had headache, bloating, bearing down pains, backache, could not sleep well, easily tired and never felt right.

"From the very first dose of Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill I began to improve. Now I am well. It is wonderful.

CANADIAN LITERATURE.

It may surprise those not thoroughly acquainted with the circumstances, to know that The Canadian Magazine has reached its fourth publication entirely by Canadians. There is no other publication in the country that has the representative of all that is best in Canadian literature—stories, poems and sketches. The June number, just to hand, is a splendid example of what a magazine should be, in both matter and contents. The opening article is an illustrated sketch of Winnipeg, written in a manner that is bound to attract the reading. "Public House Trusts," by Russell E. Mackenzie, is opportune both because this movement was inaugurated in England mainly through the support given to it by our present Governor-General, and because of the evils of liquor traffic is a problem much discussed by the present people. "The Story of the Simplon Tunnel" is a story of information from the outside world. The stories by Duncan W. Macdonald, Eric John, Rev. W. C. Gannon, Theodore Roberts and A. Stuart Stevenson, charming character sketch by Frederick Shenstone, of Halifax, is entitled "The Nova Scotia-ness of Nova Scotia." The book department is devoted mainly to a discussion of Canadian books and a chat about Canadian authors.

A RACE AGAINST THE CONSUMING ELEMENT.

With a fire raging in her main hold the Nelson liner Highland Brigade put into West Liverpool a few days ago, says the Daily Mail. The vessel left Colombo on the 3rd inst., outward with passengers and cargo. When 500 miles out the fire was discovered in the hold, in which coal had been placed at Aden. The progress of the flames became hot, and the captain to save the ship and passengers put in search of the nearest port, and steered for Liverpool. Alarm began to spread on board, and several ladies fainted. Captain Fraser and his officers, however, acted in the most coolheadedly. On lifting the hatchway a dense smoke rushed out, followed by flames. Heroic efforts to subdue the fire were made by the crew, several of whom were injured in the endeavour. No sooner had one man been taken to the hospital than another took his place.

Water was poured into the hold and the bunkers, but the vessel grew hourly hotter. At last the voyage was ended, and the vessel's only hope, though far from safe, was in the Highlandman, she could only make thirteen knots, but fortunately the sea was calm, and the race against fire was won.

Where Disease Germs Breed,

NO NEED TO FEAR "GERMS" IF THE STOMACH BE HEALTHY.

The ideal breeding place for disease germs is a weak stomach and digestive system. The food, instead of being assimilated into a sweet, nourishing blood, turns into a sour, slimy, fermenting mass, causing gases, distress after eating, bloating, sick headache and flatulency. The poisonous germs that are given off from this undigested food enter the blood, and pimples, boils, and botched skin is the result. Nervousness and sleeplessness come more often from weakened digestion than from any other one cause. Rheumatism and gout are directly caused by an acid condition of the stomach.

No ordinary food digestive can give lasting relief. It is absolutely necessary, if one wishes to be well, to use Mi-o-na, the only known remedy that soothes and heals the mucous membrane of the stomach and digestive tract, stimulates the solar-plexus, and strengthens the nerves of the stomach. This remarkable remedy puts the whole digestive system in so healthy, clean and sweet a state that fermentation of the food cannot exist, any disease germs in the stomach will be destroyed, and all food will be so well assimilated that a rapid and healthy increase in weight will quickly result.

Mi-o-na is a guaranteed cure for all diseases of the stomach, excepting cancer. A guarantee being given by Wallace's Red Cross Drug Store with every package to cure, or refund the money should the remedy not give perfect satisfaction.

Mamma—A hero, my dear, is a brave man.

Little Bess—And if I grow up and marry a brave woman will I be a hero?

"Oh, mamma," she said on her return home, "don't you know, I saw the funniest thing! A man was trying to pay on a piece. It served A B C's.

THE GLORIOUS TWELFTH.

Arrangements are progressing satisfactorily for the celebrating of the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne in Napanee, on July 12th. A great number of lodges have signified their intention of being present, and Napanee will probably see in its midst the largest crowd that has ever visited our beautiful town.

GOOD ROADS.

A Public meeting will be held at the Court House on Thursday 8th June, at 1.30 p.m. and will be addressed by A. W. Campbell, Esq., Commissioner of Highways, on the adoption of a County Road system. Members of our Municipal Councils, in fact the Public generally should attend as the question is of great importance. Mr Campbell is attending on the invitation of our County Council

QUARANTINE REGULATIONS.

A current opinion prevails that diphtheria and other contagious diseases patients require to be kept in quarantine for a period of about four weeks This is an erroneous idea as the Health Act provides that the persons quarantined may regain their liberty upon the report of the attending physician that the disease no longer exists, and that the premises have been properly and thoroughly fumigated.

JAPANESE VICTORY.

Admiral Togo has entirely destroyed the Russian fleet. The Japanese have again proven their superiority as a nations in war. They also excel in manufactories. The Japanese Jardinieres, Vases, Cups and Saucers, Plates and in fact all their wares excel all others in value and beauty. A. E. PAUL, at the Japanese House, will be pleased to show you his stock, many articles being especially suitable for wedding presents. 22a

THE HARVEY WARNER PARK.

This beautiful park, although less than one year old, is being put in excellent shape. The large maple trees that were planted this spring are doing out nicely and look as though every one will live, which would be remarkable considering the fact that they were about ninety feet in height when transplanted. The band stand, built of cement blocks and frame top, is also being erected this week, and for looks and stability will be second to none in the province.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be observed on Sunday next, after the morning service. The quarterly collection for the "Schemes of the Church" will also be taken up.

Preparatory service this Friday evening at 8 o'clock.

Anniversary sermons will be preached here on Sunday, 11th June, morning and evening, by Rev. Dr. E. D. Maclaren, Toronto, general Secretary of Home Missions. The public are cordially invited.

DO YOU OWE THE PRINTER?

This week we are sending out a statement of account to each subscriber to The Beaver whose time has recently expired or is behind for a short or longer period. The statement also asks for a year in advance. We trust our readers will attend to these small accounts promptly. Singly, they are somewhat insignificant, but taken collectively they aggregate a large sum. Attend to this at your earliest convenience, and put the printer on Easy Street.

A BUSY SECTION.

The site of the new canning factory presents a very busy appearance these days. A large number of men are engaged erecting the buildings, others are making cement blocks, levelling and grading the grounds, breaking and putting in stone for a foundation for the cement floors, and various other occupations.

Also, Major Lowry is very busy with his gang on the sewer for the canning factory. This part of the work is getting along exceedingly well. The pipes for the gas and waterworks are being laid in the same ditch with the sewer pipe, which reduces the cost considerably. A visit to this busy section of the town will well repay any person.

PARISH OF CAMDEN.

The Bishop of Ontario paid his annual visit to the Parish of Camden Tuesday and Wednesday, May 30th and 31th. Service was at Yarker on Tuesday in the evening. The service was bright and cheerful, the ascension tide note of triumph being clearly struck in hymn, praise and prayer. The choir and organist rendered a hearty service and the Bishop preached well to a large congregation. The flowers on the re-table were tastefully arranged.

The service at Camden East was at 3 p.m. on Wednesday. The Bishop preached a good sermon to a representative congregation. The organist and choir rendered the musical portion of the service very nicely. The flowers were tastefully arranged on the altar, and the Rev. J. W. Jones assisted in the service.

A splendid congregation gathered at Newburgh on Wednesday evening at 7.30. The choir were out in full force and assisted by the organist and Mr. Millar did excellent work. Mrs. C. H. Thus ended another pleasant day in the history of this parish.

is to eat unwisely. Carr's delicious Pork and Beans create hunger. Ideal for the worker. Se and 10c tins.

Up to the present 440 corpses of Hindoo laborers, European and officers, who lost their lives through the hurricane which recently swept over Natal and the subsequent bursting of the reservoir at Pinetown, the centre of the tea and sugar plantation, have been recovered. The bodies of many other victims have not been recovered.

TO STOP A CRYING BABY.

Babies cry because they are sick, or may be a pain in the stomach, colic, or cramps—but in any case a few drops of Nerviline soothes away the distress and allows the baby to sleep peacefully. Where there are young children there should also be Nerviline. It cures all the minor ailments just as promptly as the doctor—and not so expensive. For nearly fifty years Polson's Nerviline has been the great household remedy of Canada. Sold everywhere in large 25c bottles.

DO YOU OWE THE PRINTER?

The statement also asks for a remittance. We trust our readers will attend to these small accounts promptly. Singly, they are somewhat insignificant, but taken collectively they aggregate a large sum. Attend to this at your earliest convenience, and put the printer on Easy Street.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE
The Angel of the Crimea

In her home in the West End of London, passing the days of the late Autumn of her life in an invalid chair, lives a white-haired, heavy-browed, kindly-voiced noble woman, whom the world knows as Florence Nightingale. She was born in 1820 in Florence, Italy, the daughter of a wealthy Englishman, under his loving tutorship she mastered the classics and literature, became a good musician and learned several languages.

She had a genius for helpfulness, a consecration to humanity that found expression in sweet ministrations of love and deed and care of the sick and suffering. In nursing she saw a noble career for women and in 1849 went to a Protestant Institution at Kaiserwerth on the Rhine. On her return to England she assumed management of a sanitarium for invalid gentlewomen in Harley Street and Smith's land was roused to a white heat of indignation by the revelations of the horrors of the hospital service of the Crimea. Government incompetency, imbecile red tape, rascally dishonor and criminal neglect in treating the sick and wounded soldiers made mere war itself a paradise of mercy by contrast. Dante's Inferno seemed a mild bit of imagination in the face of the real horrors at Scutari, with four miles of beds huddled in one three-story house.

Florence Nightingale volunteered to lead a band of women to transform the hospitals in the name of humanity, and in November, 1854, with thirty-eight nurses she reached Scutari. Her magic touch brought order out of chaos; the sunshine, sweetness and soothing peace of woman's work filled the rooms; the ghastly mortality was reduced to a minimum; soldiers wounded and dying kissed the shadow of the Crimea as it fell across their counterpanes or reverently touched the hem of her garment as she passed near them. Often for twenty hours at a stretch she stood giving her orders—the sole leader of her little army of peace; and her kindness, wisdom, sweetness, energy, influence and inspiration seemed inexhaustible.

For two years she kept up the fight and with health impaired returned to England, where, all unheralded, all unthinking, she was received by the people, she refused, but finally accepted to found a training school for nurses. By penny subscriptions the soldiers secured enough to erect a statue to her memory, but this, too, she rejected. For nearly fifty years she has been an invalid, and yet this "Grand Old Woman of England," at the age of eighty-five is still serene, sweet, helpful and contented, with a name that will be hallowed as long as the British army and the British navy shall endure.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by W. C. Black, at the Department of Agriculture.

PASSING BOGUS BILLS.

Kingston News and Times.

The counterfeit bill man who was operating at Westbrooke and Barricfield a couple of weeks ago, is getting in a hard row in Tamworth, Yarker and other places.

On Thursday afternoon a man believed to be an American, of medium height, heavy set, and of dark complexion, succeeded in passing several American one dollar bills that had been raised to ten dollars, the one being erased and ten put in its place by pen and ink.

From there he went on to Yarker. On reaching there he called at Sam Winter's store and bought groceries, amounting to thirty cents. He tendered one of these raised bills, but the proprietor was suspicious of it, and refused to take it. He left the ranger said, "Wait and I'll go down to the station and get it changed."

A little girl of Mr. Winter's happened to be in the store at the time, and as soon as she got outside she told Winter sent her down to the station. She reached there first and warned the station master. When the stranger came in he noticed the girl and refrained from trying to pass the bill.

Realizing that the game was up so far as Yarker was concerned, he left without calling for the articles, and set out in the direction of Camden East.

Nature "makes all things beautiful in their time," and the sorry end of Winter's scene, when life moves on Nature's lines, has little to offend the eye. Even to many women dread that period when they must expect changes in their life. They fear that face and form may suffer by the change, and that they may fail to please those whom they love. The value of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription in this crisis of woman's life lies in the fact that it assists Nature. Its use preserves the tenderness and buoyancy of the mind and sustains the physical powers. Many women have expressed their gratitude for the help and comfort given by "Favorite Prescription" in this trying period. Its benefits are not only lasting but permanent and conduce to mental happiness as well as physical strength.

MADGE & WILSON

THE WINGS OF THE MORNING

BY LOUIS TRACY.

To facilitate the disposal at a distance of the disturbed debris he threw each shovelful on to a canvas sheet, which he subsequently dragged among the trees in order to dislodge its contents. After doing this four times he noticed certain metallic specks in the fifth load which recalled the presence of the antimony. But the appearance of the sixth cargo was so remarkable when brought out into the sunlight that it invited closer inspection. Though his knowledge of geology was slight, he was forced to believe that the specimens he handled so dubiously contained neither copper nor iron pyrites, but glittering yellow gold. Their weight, the distribution of the metal through quartz in a transition state between an oxide and a telluride, compelled recognition.

Somewhat excited, yet half sceptical, he returned to the excavation and scooped out yet another collection. This time there could be no mistake. Nature's own alchemy had fashioned a veritable ingot. There were small lumps in the ore which would need alloy at the mint before they could be issued as sovereigns, so free from dross were they.

Iris had gone to Venus' bath and would be absent for some time. Jenks sat down on a tree stump. He held in his hand a small bit of ore worth perhaps £20. Slowly the conjectures already pieced together in his mind during early days on the island came back to him.

The skeleton of an Englishman lying there among the bushes near the well, the Golgotha of the poison flats below, the mining tools, both Chinese and European, the plan on the piece of tin—ah, the piece of tin! Mechanically the sailor produced it from the breast pocket of his jersey. At last the mysterious sign "32 divided by 1" revealed its significance. Measure thirty-two feet from the mouth of the tunnel, dig one foot in depth, and you came upon the mother lode of this gold bearing rock. This, then, was the secret of the cave.

The Chinese knew the richness of the deposit and exploited its treasures by quarrying from the outer side of the hill. But their crass ignorance of modern science led to their undoing. The accumulation of liberated carbonic acid gas in the workings killed them in scores. They probably fought this unseen demon with the tenacity of their race until the poison became accepted and banned of all living things. Yet had they dug a little ditch and permitted the invisible terror to flow quietly downward until its potency was dissipated by sea and air they might have mined the whole cliff with impunity.

The unfortunate unknown, J. S.—he of the whitened bones—might have done this thing too. But he only possessed the half knowledge of the working miner and while shunning the fire plague stricken quarry adopted the more laborious method of making an adit to strike the deposit. He succeeded, to perish miserably in the hour when he saw himself a millionaire.

Was this a portent of the fate about to overtake the latest comer? Jenks, of course, stood up. He always stood square on his feet when the volcano within him fired his blood.

"No!" he almost shouted. "I will break the spell. I am sent here by Providence, not to search for gold, but to save a woman's life, and if all the devils of China and Mars are in league against me I will beat them!"

The sound of his own voice startled him. What was all the fuss about? With a barrow load of gold he could not buy an instant's safety for Iris, not to mention himself. The language difficulty was insuperable. Were it otherwise the Dyaks would simply humbug him until he revealed the source of his wealth, and then murder him as an effective safeguard against foreign interference.

Iris! Not once since she was hurled ashore in his arms had Jenks so long forgotten her existence. Should he tell her? They were partners in everything appertaining to the island. Why keep this marvellous intelligence from her?

Yet was he tempted, not lonely, but by reason of his love for her. Once years ago, when his arduous professional studies were diverted for a momentary infatuation for a fair face, a woman had proved fickle when tempted by greater wealth than he possessed. For long he was a confirmed misogynist, to his great and lasting gain as a leader of men. But with more equable judgment came a fixed resolution not to marry unless his prospective bride cared for him for him and not for his position. To a staff corps officer, even one with a small private income, this was no unattainable ideal. Then he met with the shame and agony of the court martial. While his soul still quivered under the lash of that terrible downfall Iris came into his life. He knew not what might happen if they were rescued. The time would quickly pass until the old order was resumed, she to go back to her position in society, he to become again a disgraced executive officer, apparently working out a mere existence before the mast or handing plates in a saloon.

Would it not be a sweet defiance of adversity were he able, even under such conditions, to win her love and then disclose to her the potentialities of the island? Perchance he might fail. Though rich as Croesus, he would still be under the social ban meted out to a cashiered officer. She was a girl who could command the gift of coronets. With restoration to her father and home, gratitude to her preserver would assuredly remain; but, alas, love might vanish like a mirage! Then he would act honorably. Half of the stored wealth would be hers to do as she chose with it.

Yes, this was a possible alternative. In case of accident to himself and her ultimate escape he must immediately write full details of his discovery and entrust the document to her, to be opened only after the death or six months after their release.

The idea possessed him so thoroughly that he could brook no delay. He searched for one of the pencil stubs given from the dead officers of the Sirdar and scribbled the following letter:

Dear Miss Deane—Whether I am living or dead when you read these lines, you will know that I love you. Could I repeat that avowal a million times in as many varied forms I should find no better phrase to express the fervency I have cherished since a happy fate permitted me to snatch you from death. So I simply say, "I love you." I will continue to love you while life lasts, and it is my dearest hope that in the life to come the grave I may still be able to voice my love for you.

But perhaps I am not destined to be loved by you. Therefore, in the event of my death before you leave the island, I wish to give you information how to find a gold mine of great value which is hidden in the rock immediately behind you. You remember the sign on the piece of tin which we could not understand. The figure 32 denotes the utmost depth of the excavation, and the 1 signifies that one foot below the surface. Assuming the face of the rock, there is a rich vein of gold. The hollow on the other side of the cliff became filled with anhydrate gas, and this stopped the operations of the Chinese, who were evidently quarrying for stone for the mine. This is all the information the experts employed by Arthur Deane will need. The facts are unquestionable.

Assuming that I am alive, we will, of course, be copartners in the mine. If I am dead, I wish one-fourth share to be given to my uncle, William Anstruther, Crossthwaite Manor, Northallerton, Yorkshire, as a recompense for his kindness to me during my early life. The remainder is to be yours absolutely.

ROBERT ANSTRUTHER.

He read this remarkable document twice through to make sure that it exactly recorded his sentiments. He even smiled sarcastically at the endowment of the uncle who disinherited him. Then, satisfied with the perusal, he tore out the two leaves covered by the letter and began to devise a means of protecting it securely while in Iris' possession.

At that moment he looked up and saw her coming toward him across the beach, brightly flushed after her bath, walking like a nymph clothed in variegated garments. Perceiving that he was watching her, she waved her hand and instinctively quickened her pace. Even now, when all were living together by the exigencies of each hour, she disliked to be long separated from him.

Instantly the scales fell from his mental vision. What! Distrust Iris! Imagine for one second that riches or poverty, good repute or ill, would affect that loyal heart! Where its virginal font was filled with the love that once for her life comes to every true woman! Perish the thought!

Laughing at his fantastic folly Jenks tore the letter into little pieces. It might have been wiser to throw the sheets into the embers of the fire close at hand, but for the nonce he was overpowered by the great awakening that had come to him.

"Good gracious! Don't gaze at me in that fashion! I don't look like a ghost, do I?" cried Iris, when near enough to note his rapt expression.

"You would not object if I called you a vision?" he inquired quietly, averting his eyes lest they should speak more plainly than his tongue.

"Not if you meant it nicely. But I fear that specter would be a more appropriate word. Just look at my best gown!"

She spread out the front widths of her skirt, and certainly the prospect was lamentable. The dress was so patched and mended, yet so full of fresh rents, that a respectable housemaid would hesitate before using it to clean fire irons.

"Is that really your best dress?" he said.

"Yes. This is my blue serge. The brown cloth did not survive the soaking it received in salt water. After a few days it simply crumbled. The others are muslin or cotton and have been re-adapted."

"There is plenty of men's clothing," he began.

"Unfortunately there isn't another island," she said severely.

"No. I meant that it might be possible to—to—contrive some sort of rig that will serve all purposes."

"But all my thread is gone. I have barely a needleful left."

"In that case we must fall back on our supply of hemp."

"I suppose that might be made to serve," she said. "You are never at a loss for an expedient."

"It will be a poor one, I fear. But you can make up for it by buying some lace gowns at Doreen & Worth's."

She laughed delightedly. "Perhaps in his joy at my reappearance, my dear

"Is that really your best dress?"

old dad may let me run riot in Paris on our way home. But that will not last. We are fairly well off, but I cannot afford ten thousand a year for dress alone."

"If any woman can afford such a sum for the purpose you are at least her equal."

Iris looked puzzled. "Is that your way of telling me that fine feathers would make me a fine bird?" she asked.

"No. I intend my words to be understood in their ordinary sense. You are very, very rich, Miss Deane, an extravagantly wealthy young person."

"Of course you know you are talking nonsense. Why, only the other day my father said—"

"Excuse me. What is the average price of a walking dress from a leading Paris house?"

"Thirty pounds."

"And an evening dress?"

"Oh, anything from fifty upward."

He picked up a few pieces of quartz from the cairn and threw.

"Here is your walking dress," he said, handing her a lump weighing about a pound. "With the balance in the rock hereabouts you can stagger the best dressed woman you meet at your first dinner in England."

"Do you mean by pelting her?" she inquired mischievously.

"Far worse. By wearing a more expensive costume."

His manner was so earnest that he compelled seriousness. Iris took the proffered specimen and looked at it.

"For the cave, I suppose? I thought you said antimony was not very valuable?"

"That is not antimony. It is gold. By chance I have hit upon an extremely rich lode of gold. At the most modest computation it is worth hundreds of thousands of pounds. You and I are quite wealthy people, Miss Deane."

Iris opened her blue eyes very wide at this intelligence. It took her breath away. But her first words betokened her innate sense of fair dealing.

"You and I! Wealthy!" she gasped. "I am so glad for your sake, but tell me, pray, Mr. Jenks, what have I got to do with it?"

"You!" he repeated. "Are we not partners in this island? By squatter's right if by no better title we own land, minerals, wood, game and even such wild belongings as ancient lights and fishing privileges."

"I don't see that at all. You find a gold mine and coolly tell me that I am half owner of it because you dragged me out of the sea, fed me, housed me, saved my life from pirates and generally acted like a devoted nursemaid in charge of a baby. Really, Mr. Jenks—"

"Really, Miss Deane, you will annoy me seriously if you say another word. I absolutely refuse to listen to such an argument."

For some time they stood in silence until the sailor commenced to reproach himself for his rough protest. Perhaps he had hurt her sensitive feelings. What a brute he was to be sure! She was only a child in ordinary affairs, and he ought to have explained things more luckily and with greater command over his temper. And all this time Iris' face was dimpling with amusement, for she understood him so well that had he threatened to kill her she would have laughed at him.

"Would you mind getting the lamp?" he said softly, surprised to catch her expression of saucy humor.

"Oh, please may I speak?" she inquired. "I don't want to annoy you, but I am simply dying to talk."

He had forgotten his own injunction. "Let us first examine our mine," he said. "If you bring the lamp we can have supper afterward."

Close scrutiny of the work already done merely confirmed the accuracy of his first impression. While Iris held the light he opened up the seam with a few strokes of the pick. Each few inches it broadened into a noteworthy volcanic dike, now yellow in its absolute purity, at times a bluish black when fused with other metals. The additional labor involved caused him to follow up the line of the fault. Suddenly the flame of the lamp began to flicker in a draft. There was an air passage between crevice and ledge.

They came back into the external glare. Iris was now so serious that she forgot to extinguish the little lamp. She stood with outstretched hand.

"There is a lot of money in there," she said.

"Tons of it."

"No need to quarrel about division. There is enough for both of us."

"Quite enough. We can even spare some for our friends."

The hour drew near when Jenks climbed to the Summit rock. He shouldered ax and rifle and set forth. Iris heard him rustling upward through the trees. She set some water to boil for tea and, while bringing a fresh supply of fuel, passed the spot where the torn scraps of paper littered the sand.

She was the soul of honor for a woman, but there was never a woman yet who could take her eyes off a written document which confronted her. She could not help seeing that one small morsel contained her own name. Though mutilated, it had clearly read—"Dear Miss Deane."

"So it was intended for me!" she cried, throwing down her bundle and dropping to her knees. She secured that particular slip and examined it earnestly. Not for worlds would she pick up all the scraps and endeavor to sort them. Yet they had a fascination for her, and at this closer range she saw another which bore the legend—"I love you!"

Somehow the two seemed to fit together very nicely.

Yet a third carried the same words—"I love you!" They were still quite coherent. She did not want to look any further. She did not even turn over such of the torn pieces as had fluttered to earth face downward.

Opening the front of her bodice, she brought to light a small gold locket containing miniatures of her father and mother. Inside this receptacle she carefully placed the three really material portions of the sailor's letter. When Jenks walked down the hill again he heard her singing long before he caught sight of her sedulously tending the fire.

As he came near he perceived the remains of his useless document. He stooped and gathered them up, forthwith throwing them among the glowing logs.

"By the way, what were you writing while I had my bath?" inquired Iris demurely.

"Some information about the mine. On second thoughts, however, I saw it was unnecessary."

"Oh, was that all?"

"Practically all."

"Then some part was impracticable?"

He glanced sharply at her, but she was merely talking at random.

"Well, you see," he explained, "one can do so little without the requisite plant. This sort of ore requires a crushing mill, a smelting furnace, perhaps big tanks filled with cyanide of potassium."

"I love you!"

"And of course, although you can do wonders, you cannot provide all those things, can you?"

Jenks deemed this query to be unanswerable.

They were busy again until night fell. Sitting down for a little while before retiring to rest, they chewed for the hundredth time the probabilities of speedy succor. This led them to the topic of available supplies, and the sailor told Iris the dispositions he had made.

CHAPTER X.

NIGHT after night the Pleiades swung higher in the firmament. Day after day the sailor perfected his defenses and anxiously scanned the ocean for sign of friendly smoke or hostile sail. This respite would not have been given to him were it not for the lucky bullet which destroyed two fingers and part of a third from the right hand of the Dyak chief. Not even a healthy savage can be trusted to treat such a wound lightly, and ten days elapsed before the maimed robber was able to move the injured limb without a curse.

Meanwhile each night Jenks slept less soundly. Each day his face became more careworn. He began to realise why the island had not been visited already by the vessel which would certainly be deputed to search for them. She was examining the great coast line of China and Siam.

It was his habit to mark the progress of time on the rudely made sundial, which sufficiently served their requirements as a clock. Iris happened to watch him chipping the forty-fourth notch on the edge of the horizontal block of wood.

"Have we really been forty-four days here?" she inquired after counting the marks with growing astonishment.

"I believe the reckoning is accurate," he said. "The Sirdar was lost on the 18th of March, and I make this the 1st of May."

"It seems to be a tremendous time; indeed, in some respects, it figures in my mind like many years. That is why I have been thinking. Otherwise, when busy, the days fly like hours."

"It must be convenient to have such an elastic scale."

"Most useful. I strive to apply the quick rate when you are grumpy."

Iris placed her arms akimbo, planted her feet widely apart and surveyed Jenks with an expression that might almost be termed impudent. They were great friends, these two, now.

Over the three months' period for continuous labor no longer spurred them to exertion during every moment of daylight, they tackled the box of books which had been driven ashore, and found in them in common, but quaint tomes in the use of which Jenks was tutor and Iris scholar.

It became a settled principle with the girl that she was very ignorant, and she insisted that the sailor should teach her. Instantly on opening the books he found a treatise on astronomy. It yielded a keen delight to both to identify a constellation and learn the sorts of wonderful things concerning it.

As a variant Jenks introduced a study of Hindustani. His method was to write down words by sounds and give in detail its component parts. She knitted her brows in the effort to master the ridiculous complexities of a language which could only say such a thing "Take" or "Bring," compels one to say "Take-go" and "Take-come."

One problem defied solution—that of providing raiment for Iris. The united skill of the sailor and herself would not induce unraveled cordage to supply the need of thread. It was either too weak or too knotty, and meanwhile the girl's clothes were falling to pieces. Jenks tried the fibers of trees, the sinews of birds—every possible expedient he could hit upon—and perhaps after experiments covering some weeks he might have succeeded. But modern dress stuffs, woven by machine dyes and stiffened with Chinese clay, permit of no such exhaustive research. It must be remembered that the lady who is wrecked on a coral rock is not dressed to suit the tropics, and the hard usage given by Iris to her scanty stock was never contemplated by the Manchester or Bradford firms responsible for the durability of the material.

As the days passed the position became irksome. It even threatened complete estrangement at a supreme moment, and the two often silently surveyed the large number of merely male articles in their possession. Of course in the matter of coats and waistcoats there was no difficulty whatever. Iris had long been wearing those portions of the doctor's uniform. But when it came to the rest—

At last one memorable morning she crossed the Rubicon. Jenks had climbed, as usual, to the Summit rock. He came back with the exciting news that he thought—he could not be certain, but there were indications inspiring hopefulness—that toward the west of the faroff island he could discern the smoke of a steamer.

Though he had eyes for a faint cloud of vapor at least fifty miles distant, he saw nothing of a remarkable change affected nearer home. Outwardly Iris was attired in her wonted manner, but if her costume was still worn not wholly monopolised by the bluish haze detected on the horizon he must have noticed the turned up ends of a pair of trousers beneath the hem of her tattered skirt.

It did occur to him that Iris received his momentous announcement with an odd air of hauteur, and it was passing strange she did not offer to accompany him when, after bolting his breakfast, he returned to the observatory.

He came back in an hour, and the lines on his face were deeper than before.

"A false alarm," he said curtly in response to her questioning look.

And that was all, though she nerved herself to walk steadily past him on her way to the well. This was disconcerting, even annoying, to a positive young woman like Iris. Resolving to end the ordeal, she stood rigidly before him.

"Well," she said, "I've done it!"

"Have you?" he exclaimed blankly.

"Yes. They're a little too long, and I feel very awkward, but they're better than—than my poor old dress unsupported."

She blushed furiously, to the sailor's complete bewilderment, but she bravely persevered and stretched out an unwilling foot.

"Oh, I see!" he growled, and he, too, reddened.

And during the remainder of the day he did not once look at her feet. Indeed, he had far more serious matters to distract his thoughts, for Iris, feverishly anxious to be busy, suddenly suggested that it would be a good thing were she able to use a rifle if a fight at close quarters became necessary.

The recoil of the Lee-Metford is so slight that any woman can manipulate the weapon with effect, provided she is not called upon to fire from a standing position, in which case the sight is liable to cause bad aiming. Though it came rather late in the day, Jenks caught at the idea. He accustomed her in the first instance to the use of blank cartridges. Then when fairly proficient in holding and sighting—a child can learn how to refill the clip and eject each empty shell—she fired ten rounds of service ammunition. The target was a white circle on a rock at eighty yards, and those of the ten shots that missed the absolute mark would have made an enemy at the same distance extremely uncomfortable.

Iris was much pleased with her proficiency. "Now," she cried, "instead of being a hindrance to you I may be some help. In any case, the Dyaks will think there are two men to face, and they have good reason to fear one of us."

Then a new light dawned upon Jenks.

"Why did you not think of it before?" he demanded. "Don't you see, Miss Deane, the possibility suggested by your words? I am sorry to be compelled to speak plainly, but I feel sure that if those scoundrels do attack us in force it will be more to secure you than to avenge the loss of their fellow tribesmen. First and foremost, the seagoing Dyaks are pirates and marauders. They prowl about the coast looking not so much for a fight as for loot and women. Now, if they return and apparently find two well armed men awaiting them, with no prospect of plunder, there is a chance that they may abandon the enterprise."

Iris did not flinch from the topic. She well knew its grave importance.

"In other words," she said, "I must be seen by them dressed only in male clothing?"

"Yes; as a last resource, that is. I have some hope that they may not discover our whereabouts owing to the precautions we have adopted. Perched up there on the ledge, we will be profoundly uncomfortable, but that will be nothing if it secures our safety."

She did not reply at once. Then she said musingly: "Forty-four days! Surely there has been ample time to scour the China sea from end to end in search of us! My father would never abandon hope until he had the most positive knowledge that the Sirdar was lost with all on board."

The sailor, through long schooling, was prepared with an answer: "Each day makes the prospect of escape brighter. Though I was naturally disappointed this morning, I must state quite emphatically that our rescue may come any hour."

He looked at him steadily.

"Do you remember, Mr. Jenks, that soon after the wreck you told me we might have to remain here many months?"

"That was a pardonable exaggeration."

"No, no! It was the truth. You are seeking now to buoy me up with false hope. It is 1,600 miles from Hongkong to Singapore, and half as much from Siam to Borneo. The Sirdar might have been driven anywhere in the typhoon. Didn't you say so, Mr. Jenks?"

He wavered under this merciless cross examination.

"I had no idea your memory was so good," he said weakly.

"Excellent, I assure you. Moreover, during our forty-four days together you have taught me to think. Why do you adopt subterfuge with me? We are partners in all else. Why cannot I share your despair as well as your toil?"

She blazed out in sudden wrath, and he understood that she would not be denied. Her eyes were full of proud fear. He bowed reverently before her, as a mortal paying homage to an angry goddess.

"I can only admit that you are right," he murmured. "We must pray that God will direct our friends to this island. Otherwise we may not be found for a year, as unhappily the fishermen who once came here now avoid the place. They have been frightened by the contents of the hold low behind the cliff. I am glad you have solved the difficulty unaided, Miss Deane. I have striven at times to be coarse, even brutal, toward you, but my heart flinched from the task of telling you the possible period of your imprisonment."

"A SECRET."

One great secret of youth and beauty for the young woman or the mother is the proper understanding of her womanly system and well-being. Every woman, young or old, should know herself and her physical make up. A good way to arrive at this knowledge is to get a good doctor book, such, for instance, as the "People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," by R. V. Pierce, M. D., which can readily be procured by sending thirty-one cents in one cent stamps for paper-bound volume, or fifty stamps for cloth-bound copy, addressing Dr. R. V. Pierce, at Buffalo, N. Y.

The change from maidenhood to womanhood is one that involves the whole body. The strain at this time upon the blood-forming structures may be too great. Disorders of the functions peculiarly feminine are nearly always dependent upon defective nutrition. In all such cases Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is just the vegetable tonic for the female system.

"I cannot express my thanks for the benefit I have received from Dr. Pierce's medicines," writes Mrs. Julius Wehrly, of Cambridge, Dorchester Co., Md. "I took 'Favorite Prescription' and feel that a perfect cure has been effected. I feel like thanking you for the kind and fatherly letters which you wrote."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was the first exclusively woman's tonic on the market. It has sold more largely in the past third of a century than any other medicine for women. Do not let the druggist persuade you to try some compound that has not had the test of so many years' success.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets should be used with "Favorite Prescription" whenever a laxative is required.

CUBAN DIARRHOEA.

U. S. soldiers who returned in Cuba during the Spanish war know what this disease is, and how ordinary remedies have little more effect than so much water. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy cured my husband of a severe attack of Cuban diarrhoea, which he brought home from Cuba. We had several doctors but they did him no good. One bottle of this remedy cured him, as our neighbors will testify. I thank God for so valuable a medicine.—For sale at The Red Cross Drug Store. 228

Irish Attendant, examining a sick ostrich—Faith, I believe she's swallowed a monkey! I can see it down his throat.

The Ostrich—Oh, get out! I saw you eat a piece of looking glass. That's your own reflection.

Doctor—Does he take the wine I ordered for him every hour?

The Nurse—Oh, yes, indeed. He's nearly eight hours ahead of time.

Mamma—When that naughty boy threw stones at you why didn't you come and tell me instead of throwing them back at him?

Little Willie—Huh! What good would it do to tell you; you couldn't hit the side of a house.

No Satisfaction In Eating.

Food does you no good. You can't digest—consequently you're afraid to eat; tongue is coated, mouth tastes bad, stomach is bloated. Pretty soon you'll be overcome by weakness and nervous prostration.

Best prescription for your condition is Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. For dyspepsia and indigestion it is doubtful if a better remedy will ever be discovered. They bring new strength and vitality to the stomach and other digestive organs, and build up the general health and instill new life into the whole system. If you have stomach trouble of any kind it is impossible to try Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

The speaker is an experienced road builder, and advanced arguments and facts that should convince the most skeptical. It is to be hoped his suggestions will be taken up and acted on promptly.

Ready-to-wear Clothing Sale--Reductions in Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing.

Clothing Stocks have to be "cultivated" pretty much as does the soil, plowed, harrowed, weeded. The Wholesale Manufacturers do this twice a year. We took advantage of the time the W. E. Sanford Mfg. Co." were weeding out their small lots a little over two weeks ago. Result was that we bought hundreds of Suits, Raincoats and odd Pants and Vests at less money than it cost to make them, and we are passing them on to our customers. Mark you, these reductions are from regular stock that sold earlier in the season at much higher prices. They are the newest of the new in material, cut and finish. Besides those we bought from "Sanfords" there are many of our own broken lots we have reduced from 25 per cent. to 40 per cent. to clear.

JOHN O'HORDAN.

With much regret many persons in Camden have heard of the decease of Mr. John O'Hordan, of Rathcore', County Kerry, Ireland, whose unmarked but tragic death took place there on Saturday, the 28th ult. His numerous friends and relatives were not wholly unprepared for a fatal issue of his ailments of well nigh a year's duration. His brother is the Rev. J. P. O'Riordan, whose amiable character and devoted zeal have endeared him to the people of Camden, among whom this exceptional priest has been laboring as curate for upward of fourteen months. On Tuesday morning, the 6th inst., a large concourse of the faithful assembled in St. Anthony's Church, Camden, to unite their suffrages with the Holy Sacrifice, which Father O'Riordan offered up for the eternal repose of his beloved brother. Father Connolly, P.P., and Father McPhail, C.SS.R., assisting in the Sanctuary. In his mournful bereavement the reverend gentleman has the undigested sympathy of the entire community without distinction of creed. —Com

A SPLENDID SHOW.

On Tuesday evening "The Southern Octoroons", a colored minstrel troupe, gave an excellent performance at the Brisco Opera House The company has been taken over by Messrs Luffman and Rooney, two local gentlemen, who will tour them next fall. There are a number of good people in the company, and a large audience was given a first-class entertainment, judging from the applause accorded. Frank Wilson, buck and wing dancer, is an artist in his line, and gave the finest exhibition of graceful dancing ever seen in Napanee. Messrs. Chambers, Gates and Hunt, as end men, were very funny and kept the audience in roars of laughter. Two exceptionally pleasing features were a drill and song entitled "Lazy Moon" and "Laughing Waters." We understand that Messrs. Luffman & Rooney have secured the Opera House here for both nights of the County Fair and we bespeak bumper houses for them on both occasions.

You have No Reason for Not Using

Zutoo

Some people think that all headache cures are alike—that they all undermine the health, even if not perceived at the time of taking them.

Well, we'll admit that the drug cures do this, but that is no reason why you should not take Zutoo.

Zutoo is a harmless vegetable remedy. One ingredient is soda—just old-fashioned soda that our grandmothers used to take to settle the stomach, when they had sick headache. And there is nothing better.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient, imported for us from Japan. It won't hurt you any more than will the soda.

There is absolutely no reason why you should not use Zutoo.

If you suffer from headache there is every reason why you should.

Take it in time, two tablets will ward off a headache. Take later, they will stop it in twenty minutes, and leave you feeling good every time.

If you are using a drug remedy, why not discard it?

Zutoo will cure just as quickly and will save you the penalty, that all must sometime pay, who take the drugs which these cures contain.

If you will give Zutoo one trial, you will never take any other headache remedy again.

EARTH'S LITTLE THINGS

REVEAL THE POWER OF GOD'S LOVE AND CARE OF CREATION.

THE ANT AS MAN'S TEACHER

"Consider Her Ways and Be Wise," Said King Soloman, Noted Thoughout the Ages For His Wisdom—Object Lesson From the Insect World, Showing the Importance of Little Things.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Leslie Grant, in the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 4.—In his sermon the preacher, drawing an object lesson from the insect world, shows the importance in human affairs of honest, intelligent, unremitting industry and the folly of those who belittle or underestimate it. The text is Proverbs vi, 6, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard, consider her ways and be wise."

It was a hot, sultry afternoon in summer on the famous Chautauqua ground of New York when Bishop John H. Vincent knocked at Wilbur Chapman's door. "Come in," called the evangelist. In walked the founder of the Chautauqua movement in this country. He said, "Chapman, I want you to go and hear a lecture this afternoon." "What on?" "It is given by a college professor. The lecture is entitled 'My friends the Gila Monster, the Horned Owl, the Opossum and the Rat.'" "No, bishop," said Dr. Chapman; "I cannot go. I am utterly worn out by speaking. Besides that, I have a big meeting for to-night for which I must rest and prepare. You must let me off this once." "No, Chapman, I will not let you off. You must come. There is one great great lesson for you." So, under the pleading demands of Bishop Vincent, he went.

"At first," said Dr. Chapman afterward, "I sat away back in the audience, that I might be able to slip away unseen. But as the speaker began to talk about his novel friends I became more and more absorbed. Unconsciously I crept halfway down the aisle and took a seat nearer to the speaker. Then, as he talked on and on, I crept further and further until I was in the front seat. There I sat for nearly two long hours laughing and crying and learning the great lessons of life from the lives of the most humble of God's creatures. I never before realised that there was so much love and affection and unselfishness and brain power in creeping things and loathsome reptiles and poisonous lizards and repulsive rats."

The little lessons of earth reveal the power of God's love and care, as well as the greater things. King Solomon would introduce us to one of his little friends. He would have us use an ant hill for a pulpit. He would have us let the preacher of the morning one of the ordinary, commonplace, large mandibled, hairy legged, three pronounced, six legged insects that we can see in almost every country bypath. He would tell us that this ant's intelligent forethought, her persevering energy, her many social affinities, her mortal hatreds, her sensitiveness to touch and color, her architectural genius with which she constructs the palace in which are to be deposited the precious eggs, her slaves and nurses who serve her in peace, her military captains who marshal her great armies in war, her care for the cocoons in which the grubs are developed into the perfect insects, as the caterpillar unfolds the transfigured life of a butterfly, offer unlimited fields for gospel illustration. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard, consider her ways and be wise."

Busy, busy, busy. "Busy as an ant" is an old proverb. Whether she is caring for her eggs or finding the grubs; whether she belongs to a foraging party or is going forth upon a war of conquest to capture the eggs of another hive, which eggs she intends to develop into future slaves; whether she is migrating from one part of the country to another or is building the walls and the hallways, squaring the chambers, laying the foundations or architect of the dome of a new house, the ant is always busy. She works during the day, she works while she sleeps. Her ambition is not to find out how little she can do, but how much she can do. She works, and works, and works. She keeps on working. To do something is the very breath of her existence.

This proverb is axiomatic. You go out for a summer stroll and one of your little children calls: "Papa, come, come and look. See these little black things. What are they?" "Ants, my dear," you say. Then you stoop over that hive and watch them. They are moving, always moving. Some are busy house cleaning. If you could enter the chamber of an ant mound, you would find that each room and connecting hallway are absolutely clean. Every particle of dust which could have entered these galleries has been carried out, piece by piece, and deposited afar off, where it will not disturb the happiness of the ant hill. Some of these ants are house cleaning. Some are going after food. Some are caring for the young. And others are all working—the ants are always working. Their working hours are simply unlimited. Sir John Lubbock, the famous naturalist, reported that he once watched a single ant who worked without intermission or relaxation from 6 o'clock in the morning until nearly 10 o'clock at night, five additional hours that ant continued diligently at her task. You cannot dream of a lot of ants getting together, as do some men to-day, whose chief aim seems to be to find out how little work they can do in life and what is the maximum of pay they can force out of their employers for the minimum of labor. Oh, no. That is not the ant's way. No sooner does the sunlight crawl over the eastern hills than the ant hill becomes busy. The different ants say: "Come, sisters, we must get busy. Hurry up now. We have so much work to do and such a little time in which to do it. Be busy. Be busy!" The human foot may have often crushed an ant in the pathway, but I doubt if it ever killed an ant asking an afternoon nap. When an ant is slain in the country road she is always hurrying somewhere or trying to get back to the hive after she has accomplished the purpose of her going. Back to work

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

"Do you like a brass band?" he asked, as they were listening to the music in the park.

"Oh, yes," she said; "a brass band is very nice, but I think I would rather have a gold one."

They Advertise Themselves.— Immediately they were offered to the public Parmelee's Vegetable Pills became popular because of the good report they made for themselves. That reputation has grown, and they now rank among the first medicines for use in attacks of dyspepsia and biliousness, complaints of the liver and kidneys, rheumatism, fever and ague and the innumerable complications to which these ailments give rise.

Defined.—Gladys—I call it an automobile engagement.

Maude—What's an automobile engagement?

Gladys—One that starts off all right, but nobody's quite dead sure that it will be able to keep on going.

They Cleanse the System Thoroughly —Parmelee's Vegetable Pills clear the stomach and bowels of all foul matter, cause the excretory vessels to throw off impurities from the blood and the bowels and expel the deleterious mass from the body. They are a wonderful gain or inconvenience to the patient, who speedily realizes their good effects as soon as they begin to take effect. They have strong recommendations from all kinds of people.

"Is you steal—I don't care what it is —you'll regret it, mighty quick."

"What! Didn't you ever steal a kiss?"

"Yes, and I married the girl."

Do not delay in getting relief for the little folks. Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator is a pleasant and safe cure. If you love your child why do you let it suffer when a remedy is so near at hand?

Mr. Holdyer—Yes, my dear, as the great Napoleon said, "Every man should be right than be President."

Mrs. Holdyer—Humph! I'm sure I don't see why. You have twice as good a chance of being President.

It is Good for Man and Beast.—Not only is Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil of incomparable value in every household, but the farmer and stockman will find it very serviceable in the farm yard and on the range, often doing away with the services of a veterinary surgeon. In injuries to stock, colds, sore throat, cough and pains it can be used with good effect.

Smith, who had purchased a new horse warranted to be quiet to ride and drive, called after to begin, and invited a friend to accompany him for a trial drive.

They had not gone very far when the horse bolted, ran against a heap of stones lying in the road, and pitched both occupants and the carriage violently into the lane. When they recovered their self-possession somewhat, the buggy shafts and a heap of wreckage was Smith began to roar.

"What on earth are you laughing at?" dejectedly inquired his friend.

"Why, I was only telling you that horse lent me the buggy."

Cucumbers and melons are "forbidden fruit" to many persons who complained that the least indulgence is followed by attacks of cholera, dysentery, griping, etc. These persons are most aware that they can indulge to their heart's content if they have on hand a bottle of Dr. D. D. D. Prescription. It is a herb cordial, a medicine that will give immediate relief and is a sure cure for all summer complaints.

A GLASS OF SODA PER DAY

That five cents a day will probably always be a bone of contention between the economists and those of us who are not economically inclined, there appears to be something to it. We quote the following from the following by Benedict Bachelier in the New Iowa Woman's Magazine for June: "One glass of soda per day—delectable stuff, too, we must assume—would cost $15 per year, provided they bought the syrup and had no bath. What will $15 per year do? Well, among other things, it would pay the tuition of at least three and three quarter children away for two weeks each to some Fresh Air farm. It would pay the salary for one year of a native Armenian missionary student. There's charity for you. It would buy a good typewriter. There's literature of your own making. It would buy an illuminated set of the works of the most any well-known author, living or dead, that you may select. It would buy unilluminated sets of half a dozen standard authors. There's more literature. It would subscribe for any number of magazines by the year. It would buy your shoes. It would buy a dining-room table or a rug. It would buy two or three commutation tickets to New York. It would buy your wife a new hat—a good one. It will buy your husband a new overcoat. Those are practical things. It will take you to the theater more than once a month, singly, or seven and a half times in barrues. It could buy you a box of candy. It will pay a week's board for you in the summer. There's pleasure, but no limit to the things that $15 will do, provided the footings do not exceed it."

Mr. Courtney—Well — er—but you're not—not brown, you know. Ha, ha! Do you like strawberries?

Little Elsie's father was a very homely man. One day, after looking at him steadily for some time, she said:

"Mamma, didn't they have any good-looking men in stock when you went shopping for a husband?"

Wife—George, I wouldn't buy any more accident insurance tickets—it's a mere waste of money.

Husband—Why, my dearest—

Wife—Because I would be very lucky enough to use them—they never do us any good.

Clementina—And are you sure you want to marry me?

Roderick—I don't see any other way of handling your money.

THE GLORIOUS TWELFTH.

Arrangements are proceeding satisfactorily for the celebration of the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne, in Napanee, on July 12th. TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chambers,
Napanee, June 5th, '05.

Council met in regular session on Monday evening. Mayor Lowry in the chair, and Councillors Normile, Kimmerly, Simpson, Graham, Williams, Delong.

Minutes of last regular and special meetings were read and confirmed.

A communication was read from J. S. Creen, Chief of Police, which was laid on the table until later in the evening.

A communication from J. S. Vandyke, offering to furnish the town with stone at $4.00 per toise, was read and laid on the table.

Communication was received from the Burrow, Stewart Milling Co., Hamilton, asking for a reply in regard to the purchasing of cattle scales. The matter was left in the hands of the Town Property Committee to report at next meeting.

There were a number of communications from different electrical and engineering firms, offering terms, etc., in regard to the installation of an electric light plant here, which were referred for future reference.

A communication was read from the town solicitor in reference to sewer in rear of Mr. H. B. Sherwood's property on Piety Hill, which was referred to the table till next meeting of the Council.

On motion of Coun. Simpson, a deputation from the Board of Trade was heard.

Mr. G. F. Ruttan was very much in favor of having an Agricultural College and Experimental Farm established in this locality, and was of the opinion that Kingston was already making an effort to get it there, and that Napanee was the most central east of Toronto, for such an institution.

Mr. Madole said he could not add much to what had already been said by Mr. Ruttan, but if Napanee should take an active part in the matter, he would use his personal influence or anything that he could do to help it along. He was in perfect accord with the movement.

Mr. W. A. Bellhouse said we should urge our rights in that direction, and he thought a petition should be sent to the different municipalities throughout the county to get the signatures of the farmers who would be in favor of such a move.

Mr. W. F. Hall thought it an excellent proposition and he for one would do all he could to help it along.

Mr. T. G. Carscallen, M.P., was the last speaker. He said he would be glad to do anything in his power, both here and in Toronto, to help the movement along. He said Napanee should try, and try hard, to have this Experimental farm and Agricultural College located in this town if immediate vicinity.

On motion Councillors Graham, Williams, the Mayor and Clerk were authorized to sign such petition and give corporate seal thereto.

There were a large number present standing room being almost at a premium, when the matter in relation of the chief's wrong doing discussed.

Coun. Simpson thought that Mr. T. G. Carscallen was the spokesman of the evening on this subject. Mr. Carscallen, Roy Sampson 130, Leelana Thomson 201, Percy Tompkins 162, John Aylesworth 203, Harry Meeks 102, Myrtle Lockwood 164, Walter Story 86, Sheriden Keller 70, Sophia Bergeron 62, Susan Meeks 21, Laura Fox 25.

Coun. Ming made similar remarks to those of Coun. Madole, and thought he should be given one more trial.

Coun. Normile was in favor of giving the chief another chance, and that if he should overstep the mark again he would be one of the first ones to favor his dismissal.

Moved by Coun. Ming, seconded by Coun. Normile, that the resignation be not accepted.

Coun. Ming asked for the yeas and nays.

Nays—Ming. Normile, Williams, Simpson.

Yeas—Graham, Kimmerly.

HOW GERM DISEASES START.

PEOPLE WITH WEAK STOMACHS IN A CONTINUAL STATE OF DANGER.

Nearly all disease germs that find lodgment in the system gain entrance with the air we breathe, or through our food and drink.

If the stomach and digestive organs be weak, so that food does not readily digest, they will contain a sour, slimy, fermenting mass, an ideal spot for the disease germs to grow and spread through the whole system.

People with a weak stomach are in a continual state of danger, and they should use the best means, Mi-o-na, to strengthen that organ and tone up the whole digestive system. This remedy is a certain cure for all diseases of the stomach excepting cancer. Used before each meal, it so strengthens the whole digestive system that disease can not possibly live, when Mi-o-na is used.

If you suffer with headache, backache, variable appetite, nausea, gnawing at the pit of the stomach, sallow skin, heart-burn, furred tongue, sleeplessness, and general debility, it shows that the stomach has been overworked and weakened. A fifty cent box of Mi-o-na tablets will give quick and speedy relief.

Ask T. B. Wallace, one of the most reliable druggists in Napanee to show you the strong guarantee under which he sells Mi-o-na.

JUNE WEDDINGS.

WELLS—MARSH.

The wedding of Miss Edith Gertrude Wells and Mr. Frank D. Marsh was celebrated in St. Patrick's Church, Napanee, Tuesday morning at eight o'clock, by the Rev. Father Hartigan. Miss Ella Marsh attended the bride, and Mr. "Bob." Harpell, of Kingston, acted as best man. The bride wore a gown of grey silk veil with lace trimming with hat to match, and was given away by her uncle, Mr. Edward Wells. The bridesmaid was attired in blue silk and hat to match. After the ceremony a dainty wedding breakfast was served at the Paisley House. The gift of the groom to the bride was a handsome gold necklace, to the bridesmaid an opal ring and to the groomsman a pearl pin. The bride's travelling suit was blue broad cloth with white silk blouse and hat to match. The happy couple took the 10.20 train for Niagara and Buffalo, with the best wishes of their many friends.

JONES—BRECKENRIDGE.

A most happy event took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Manly Jones, Richmond Township, on Tuesday, June 6th, when their only daughter Martha Gertrude, was united in marriage to Mr. George Albert Breckenridge, of Brighton. The ceremony which was witnessed by about forty of the relatives and friends of the contracting parties, was performed by Rev. J. H. Read, of the W. Church, Napanee. The bride was given away by her father. She looked most charming dressed in white swiss organdie muslin, and carrying a bouquet of roses. Miss Florence Sidney Allen was bridesmaid, while the groom was supported by his brother, Mr. Charles Breckenridge, of Toronto. The wedding march was played by Miss Bella Davis, of Adolphustown, as the bridal party entered the parlor, which was beautifully decorated with evergreens and white lilies. After the wedding the party sat down to a bountifully provided dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Breckenridge left on the 4.30 train for their home in Brighton, followed by the well wishes of a great many friends. Owing to lack of space a partlist of presents will not appear until next week.

LORD MOUNT STEPHEN
The Career of a Great Canadian

The greatest philanthropist of Canada is Lord Mount Stephen; the greatest benefactor of the United States is Andrew Carnegie—both men who came to the new world a poor boys from the east of Scotland, have made great fortunes and have spread with lavish hand their accumulated wealth.

When George Stephen, the son of a poor carpenter in the small Scotch village of Dufftown was born in 1829, the outlook for a great success seemed surely dim and improbable. When, after completing the course at the little parish school he undertook to earn his living as herd-boy on the minister's farm in the glen, it never came to him of the time when he would be known as a Lord, high in the councils of State, the friend of the King and the benefactor of his people. Then came an uncontrollable desire to see the larger world, and as an apprentice at the drapery trade he went to Aberdeen, and later to Glasgow and London. In 1850 he left England for Canada, where he engaged in the woolen business, and in a few years was well on the high road to prosperity.

In Canada he found his cousin, Donald Smith, later Lord Strathcona, and the two Highlanders who had played together as boys, joined issues, and soon like the meeting of the waters, their combined efforts flowed in one channel. Both were directors in the Bank of Montreal, both are interested in railways, and both have achieved fame as philanthropists, statesmen, art connoisseurs and in diplomatic circles. In 1870 Lord Mount Stephen joined a syndicate for purchasing the bonds of the Dutch stockholders of the St. Paul and Pacific Railroad, which, when completed, controlled the Northwest of Canada.

When the British Columbian entered the Dominion it was with the understanding that the Government would build a railroad across the continent. The Government failed sadly in its plans; in 1880, one year before the entire road was to have been ready, only 700 of it were finished. Chaos prevailed and collapse was imminent. Then Lords Mount Stephen and Strathcona came forward and for a subsidy of $25,000,000, full title to the road was transferred to them.

In 1885 and five years later was raised the railroad that his energy and enterprise helped to create.

RECEPTION TO THE DELEGATES.

Canon and Mrs. Jarvis hit upon a very charming hostess in the reception they gave at the rectory, last Thursday night, and Mr. and Mrs. Jones of Napanee. The old Macpherson place, with its large spacious rooms, its pretty Napanee river, and its old-fashioned, cosy dining room, has been converted into the rectory, and in it one may draw comparisons between the old idea of beauty and comfort, and that of the present, and the comparison is not favorable to the latter. The feature, however, was the refreshment room—the kitchen, with its deep-set windows, and its vast fireplace, where the blazing logs cast their old-time glow. The crane was there, and a patch of paint on the right of the big fire-place marked where the oven had been walled up. Over the fireplace hung a scythe, a rake, a saw, and other implements of the farmer, after the manner of long ago, and through the camp fire coals in broken kindling sticks. Pegs were hung upon the walls, and furniture of the olden-time completed the delightful arrangement. Needless to say that with a delightful host and hostess, and in such attractive surroundings, a very pleasant evening was spent, a large number adding to the gaiety of the scene of the children of the house.

After the presentation of the provincial life membership by Bishop Bidgood to Mrs. Smith at Napanee, on Thursday afternoon a similar honor was the giving of a life membership to Mrs. Daly, who has been the faithful corresponding secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary for the past nine years. Should You Vote for the By-Law?

To the Ratepayers of the Town of Napanee—

Is it not about time that you were awakening? about time to look about you and take stock of the financial situation of the town? If you do not awaken and very soon you will find when it is too late that you have been saddled with an enormous debt.

There is now an attempt made, to have the Town of Napanee to a proposal which will very probably double your present debt and bring your taxes up to the extreme limit of two cents on the dollar, equal to about 50 per cent. of the net income of your several properties.

Do not be deluded into the belief that if you vote $35,000 to provide Electric Light you will escape for the rate you carry on the interest and sinking fund enough, as interest and sinking fund just now would mean $2021 added to your taxes, but that is not all by any means.

You have had your season in the case of Mr. Scott who has already spent $2,000 in trying to run an Electric Plant, and if you wish to repeat his experiment, you will not escape so cheaply.

Every person who knows anything of Electric Lighting, knows that are horse power is required for every are lamp and also the same for every 10 (16 cp) Incandescent lamps. Now suppose you want 30 Arc lamps and two hundred lights, this means you must supply 100 h.p. steadily, every day throughout the year.

Now the Fuel Bill alone, with Coal at $4.00 per ton, and it may cost much more, will run to $30 per h.p. This means a cost for Fuel, and that is every $2000.00 for interest and a sinking fund of $2024.000 and allow even so small a rate, as 5 per cent. per annum for depreciation of the Plant, and that is very much less than experienced Electric are ill be right work either, you must pay them well, especially as they will have charge of expensive machinery, and any carelessness on their part would run hundreds, perhaps thousands of dollars to repair.

Allowing nothing for extras, these four items alone, are yet sure to run up to full $9000.00 a year.

Interest and sinking fund ...$2000.00
Fuel, 100 h.p. 3000.00
Depreciation 2000.00
Wages and Superintendence 2000.00

$9000.00

Extras, who can tell?

Now even if you get a flat rate of $4.00 per lamp for every incandescent and a corresponding rate for each Arc, you cannot hope to receive over $4000.00 a year (and which very little will be but poorly paid, the Town will be face to face with a debt of more than the patrons of customers will be willing to pay. There is a dead loss of $5000.00 a year and a very large chance if it is not more.

Talk it over with your neighbor, look into it from every point of view, study it out for yourself—and above all yourselves, that a private party who has put everything, or nearly so, in his worth into the proposition, and who had a possible profit of only 10 per cent. at the best advantage, loss $20,000.00 or $30,000.00 during the time he ran his Electric Plant, ans Town Council you are likely to have a possible profit of no success.

The plain truth is the whole thing is a delusion and a snare.

There is a good deal of spending in $35,000.00, and some part of it will make money out of it, what else in Town of Napanee may lose.

Manufacturers are not going to locate Napanee so much as have tax a. Not if these taxes will not in every case property, manufactures will not come to Napanee and the town is ruined. Nor will ones developed when men can no longer get income they ought to get will be swallowed up in taxes.

The Statute provides that not more than 2 cents on the dollar can be collected from the ratepayers in any one year. The general purpose of the Municipality. The rate collected in 1904 for the general purposes of the Town was 18 1-2 mills, within 1 1-2 mills of the total 20 mills allowed by the Town in 1904 was $995,204.00. Now with $ 024.05 more to pay, or more to be collected from the ratepayers of the Town, you will see that there is same assessment. It means exercising the rate of 2 cents on the dollar. However, members of the Town Council have certainly got days in which to deal with the assessment, so as to keep the rate down. Assessment up, and rate up.

Things are bad enough to-day with taxes very much as they should be, but how worse if you go piling up heavy debts, and still heavier taxation.

Moreover you must remember that in these calculations the most favorable rate of interest has been taken, assuming that the estimate made, as printed on By-law will not be exceeded. As a matter of fact, it is notorious that such estimates are invariably exceeded. For example take the Collegiate Institute, estimated to cost $12,000.00, and will really cost nearly $26,000.00. In this same By-law you are also told that these works will cost $35,000.00, but depend upon it you will be called upon pay nearer $50,000.00 before you are through, and if you lose 10 per cent. a year on that sum for repairs and depreciation, it will only be about what most prudent Corporations expect to have to write off if they mean to keep their Electric Plant in repair and up to date.

Freeholders and long lease holders only, vote on this By-law. There is no chance of this By-law if you do and if the rate payers will only wake up, post themselves in the matter and act just where they are being led.

Rev. H. Cairns, agent for several land companies in the Northwest, left on Tuesday morning with a large number of land seekers, who are going to that country. Mr. Cairns, who is in the west in April, Mr. Cairns secured land for 1,000 settlers, and this year his large plans prepared and is now disposing of town lots at a nominal figure. The means $2000.00 a year for Fuel, and $2000.00 for interest and a sinking fund of $2024.000 and allow even so small a rate, as 5 per cent. per annum for depreciation of the Plant, and that is very much less than experienced Electric are ill be right work either, you must pay them well, especially as they will have charge of expensive machinery, and any carelessness on their part would run hundreds, perhaps thousands of dollars to repair.

Allowing nothing for extras, these four items alone, are yet sure to run up to full $9000.00 a year.

Depreciation 2000.00

Extras, who can tell?

Now even if you get a flat rate of $4.00 per lamp for every incandescent and a corresponding rate for each Arc, you cannot hope to receive over $4000.00 a year (and which very little will be but poorly paid, the Town will be face to face with a debt of more than the patrons of customers will be willing to pay. There is a dead loss of $5000.00 a year and a very large chance if it is not more.

Talk it over with your neighbor, look into it from every point of view, study it out for yourself—and above all yourselves, that a private party who has put everything, or nearly so, in his worth into the proposition, and who had a possible profit of only 10 per cent. at the best advantage, loss $20,000.00 or $30,000.00 during the time he ran his Electric Plant, ans Town Council you are likely to have a possible profit of no success.

THE WINGS OF THE MORNING

Blood

BY LOUIS TRACY.

Keep your blood clean as you keep your body clean. You don't wait until your body is foul before you cleanse it.

It is a matter of surprise that many people who are so careful to have clean bodies make no effort to keep the blood clean. Everyone knows that uncleanness breeds disease; that those who do not keep their bodies in a wholesome condition and who dwell in filthy surroundings are the first to fall when some epidemic of disease sweeps the country. But foul blood is more dangerous to the individual than a foul body. An unclean body is rather a passive than an active hindrance to health. But unclean blood is an active threat against the very life—it makes the body a prepared breeding place for disease.

It is part of Nature's plan for human safety that in many cases where the blood is impure or corrupt she sets a sign on the body in proof of the corrupt current that is flowing through the veins. Scrofula with its disfiguring glandular tumors, eczema with its irritation, salt-rheum, tetter, erysipelas, boils, pimples and other eruptions are only the outward signs of the impurity of the blood. But often in the earlier or simpler stages of impurity these eruptions are no outward signs of this condition; only dull, languid, sluggish feelings, which are commonly attributed solely to the sluggishness of the liver.

Of all preparations for purifying the blood Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery easily takes the first place. It eliminates from the blood the elements which clog and corrupt it, and which breed and feed disease. It acts directly on the blood-making glands, increasing their activity, and so increasing the supply of rich, pure blood which is the life of the body.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for diseases of the stomach, blood and lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, paper cover, is sent free on receipt of 21 one-cent stamps to pay customs and mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Oh, I see!" he growled.

the distant exit, she heard him hewing manfully at the rock for a couple of hours. At last he emerged, grimy with dust and perspiration, just in time to pay a last visit to Summit rock before the sun sank to rest. He asked the girl to delay somewhat the preparations for their evening meal, as he wished to take a bath; so it was quite dark when they sat down to eat.

Iris had long recovered her usual state of high spirits.

"Why were you burrowing in the cavern again?" she inquired. "Are you in a hurry to get rich?"

"I was following an air shaft, not a lode," he replied. "I am occasionally troubled with after-wit, and this is an instance. Do you remember how the flame of the lamp flickered while we were opening up our mine?"

"Yes."

"I was so absorbed in contemplating our prospective wealth that I failed to pay heed to the future significance of that incident. It meant the existence of an upward current of air. Now, where the current goes there must be a passage, and while I was busy this afternoon among the 'trees over there' —he pointed toward the valley of death—"it came to me like an inspiration that possibly a few hours' hewing and delving might open a shaft to the ledge. I have been well rewarded for the effort. The stuff in the vault is so rotten away by water that it is no more solid than sand for the most part. Already I have scooped out a chimney twelve feet high."

"What good can that do?"

"At present we have only a front door—up the face of the rock. When my work is completed—before tomorrow night, I hope—we shall have a back door also. Of course I may encounter unforeseen obstacles as I advance. A twist in the fault would be nearly fatal if I am going to find that it may continue straight to the ledge."

"I still don't see the great advantage to us."

"The advantages are many, believe me. The more points of attack presented by the enemy the more effective will be our resistance. I doubt if they would ever be able to crush the cave were we to hold it, whereas I can go up and down our back staircase whenever I choose. If you don't mind being left in the dark I will resume work now by the light of your lamp."

But Iris protested against this arrangement. She felt, in fact, that the hours of silence had been distasteful to her. She wanted to talk.

"I agree," said Jenks, "provided you do not pin me down to something I told you a month ago."

"I promise. You can tell me as much or as little as you think fit. The subject for discussion is your court martial."

He could not see the tender light in her eyes, but the quiet sympathy of her voice restrained the petty resentment on his lips. Yet he blurted out after a slight pause:

"That is a very unsavory subject."

"Is it? I do not think so. I am a friend, Mr. Jenks, not an old one, I admit, but during the past six weeks we have bridged an ordinary acquaintanceship of as many years. Can you not trust me?"

Trust her? He laughed softly. Then, choosing his words with great deliberation, he answered: "Yes, I can trust you. I intended to tell you the story some day. Why not tonight?"

Unseen in the darkness Iris' hand sought and clasped the gold locket suspended from her neck. She already knew some portion of the story he would tell. The remainder was of minor importance.

"It is odd," he continued, "that you should have alluded to six years a moment ago. It is exactly six years almost to a day since the trouble began."

"With Lord Ventnor?" The name slipped out involuntarily.

"Yes. I was then a staff corps subaltern, and my proficiency in native languages attracted the attention of a friend in Simla, who advised me to apply for an appointment on the political side of the government of India. I did so. Ventnor backed the application, and I was assured of the next vacancy in a native state provided that I got married. I was not a marrying man, Miss Deane, and the requisite qualification nearly staggered me. But I looked around the station and came to the conclusion that the commissioner's niece would make a suitable wife. I regarded her 'points,' so to speak, and they filled the bill. She was smart, good looking, lively, understood the art of entertaining, was first rate in sports and had excellent teeth. Indeed, if a man selected a wife as he does a horse, she"—

"Don't be horrid. Was she really pretty?"

"I believe so. People said she was."

"But what did you think, yourself?"

"At the time my opinion was biased. I have seen her since, and she wears badly. She is married now and after thirty grow very fast."

Artful Jenks! Iris settled herself comfortably to listen.

"I have jumped that fence with a lot in hand," he thought.

"We became engaged," he said aloud. "She threw herself at him," communed Iris.

"Her name was Elizabeth—Elizabeth Morris." The young lieutenant of those days called her Bessie, but no matter.

"Well, you didn't marry her, anyhow," commented Iris, a trifle sharply.

And now the sailor was on level ground again.

"Thank heaven, no!" he said earnestly. "We had barely become engaged when she went with her uncle to Simla for the hot season. There she met Lord Ventnor, who was on the viceroy's staff, and—if you don't mind, we will skip a portion of the narrative—I discovered then why men in India usually go to England for their wives. While in Simla on ten days' leave I had a foolish row with Lord Ventnor in the United Service club—hammered him, in fact, in defense of a worthless woman—and was only saved from a severe reprimand because I had been badly treated. Nevertheless, my hopes of a political appointment vanished, and I returned to my regiment to learn after due reflection what a very lucky person I was."

"Concerning Miss Morris, you mean?"

"Exactly. And now exit Elizabeth. Not being cut out for matrimonial enterprise, I tried to become a good officer. A year ago, when the government asked for volunteers to form Chinese regiments, I sent in my name and was accepted. I had the good fortune to serve under an old friend, Colonel Costobell, but some malign star sent Lord Ventnor there the first case this time in an important civil capacity. I met him occasionally, and we found we did not like each other any better. My horse beat his Arab. Pogoda Hurdle handicap. Poor old Sultan, I wonder where he is now!"

"Colonel Costobell fell ill, and the command of the regiment devolved upon me, our only major being absent in the interior. The colonel's wife, unhappily, chose that moment to flirt, as people say, with Lord Ventnor. Not having learned the advisability of minding my own business, I remonstrated with her, thus making her my deadly enemy. Lord Ventnor contrived an official mission to a neighboring town and detailed me for the military charge. I sent a junior officer. Then Mrs. Costobell and he deliberately concocted a plot to ruin me, he for the sake of his evil animosity—you remember that I had also crossed his path in Egypt—she because she feared I would speak to her husband. On pretense of seeking my advice she invented me at night into a deserted corner of the club grounds at Hongkong. Lord Ventnor appeared, and as the upshot of their vile statements, which created an immediate uproar, I—well, Miss Deane, I nearly killed him."

He virtually recalled the anguish he betrayed when this topic was inadvertently broached one day early in their acquaintance. Now he was reciting his painful history with the air of a man far more concerned to be scrupulously accurate than aroused in his deepest passions by the memory of past wrongs. What had happened in the interim to blunt these bygone sufferings? Iris clasped her locket. She thought she knew.

"The remainder may be told in a sentence," he said. "Of what avail were my frenzied statements against the definite proofs adduced by Lord Ventnor and his unfortunate ally? Even her husband believed her and became in my bitter foe. Poor woman! I have it in my heart to pity her. Well, that is all. I am here!"

"Can a man be ruined so easily?" murmured the girl, her exquisite tact leading her to avoid any direct expression of sympathy.

"It seems so. But I have had my reward. If ever I meet Mrs. Costobell again I will thank her for a great service."

Iris suddenly became confused. Her brow and neck tingled with a quick access of color.

"Why do you say that?" she asked. And Jenks, who was rising, either did not hear or pretended not to hear the tremor in her tone.

"Because you once told me you would never marry Lord Ventnor, and after what I have told you now I am quite sure you will not."

"Ah, then you do trust me?" she almost whispered.

He forced back the words trembling for utterance. He even strove weakly to assume an air of good humored indulgence.

"See how you have tempted me from work, Miss Deane," he cried. "We have gossiped here until the fire grew tired of our company. To bed, please, at once."

Iris caught him by the arm.

"I will pray tonight and every night," she said solemnly, "that your good name may be cleared in the eyes of all men, as it is in mine. And I am sure my prayer will be answered."

She passed into her chamber, but her angelic influence remained. In his very soul the man thanked God for the tribulation which brought this woman into his life. He had traversed the wilderness to find an oasis of rare beauty.

It was a beautiful night. After a baking hot day the rocks were radiating their stored up heat, but the pleasant southwesterly breeze that generally set in at sunset tempered the atmosphere and made sleep refreshing. Jenks could not settle down to rest for a little while after Iris left him. She did not bring forth her bed, and he unwilling to disturb her, he picked up a resinous branch, lit it in the dying fire and went into the cave.

He wanted to survey the work already done and to determine whether it would be better to resume operations in the morning from inside the excavation or from the hole. Owing to the difficulty of constructing a vertical upward shaft and the danger of a sudden fall of heavy material, he decided in favor of the latter course, although it entailed lifting all the refuse out of the hole. To save time, therefore, he carried his mining tools into the open, placed in position the cheval de frise long since constructed for the defense of the entrance, and poured water over the remains of the fire.

This was his final care each night before stretching his weary limbs on his couch of bracken. It caused delay in the morning, but he neglected no precaution, and there was a possible chance of the Dyaks falling to discover the eagle's nest if they were pursued by other indications that the island was deserted.

He entered the hut and was in the act of pulling off his boots when a distant shot rang sharply through the air. It was magnified tenfold by the intense silence. For a few seconds, that seemed to be minutes, he listened, clenching the quick thought that perhaps a turtle, wandering far beyond accustomed limits, had disturbed one of the spring gun communications on the sands. A sputtering volley, which his trained ear recognized as the firing of musale loaders, sounded the death knell of his last hope.

The Dyaks had landed! Coming silently and mysteriously in the dead of night, they were themselves the victims of a stratagem they designed to employ. Instead of taking the occupants of Rainbow island unawares they were startled at being greeted by a shot the moment they landed. The alarmed savages at once retaliated by firing their antiquated weapons point blank at the trees, thus giving warning enough to wake the seven sleepers.

Iris, fully dressed, was out in a moment.

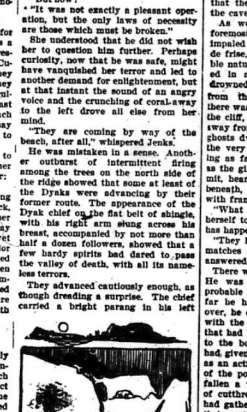
"They have come!" she whispered.

"Yes," was the cheery answer, for Jenks face to face with danger was a very different man from Jenks wrestling with the insidious attacks of Cupid. "Up the ladder! Be lively! They will not be here for half an hour if they lack up such a row at the first difficulty. Still, we will take no risks. Cast down those spare lines when you reach the top and haul away when I say 'Ready?' You will find everything to hand up there."

He held the bottom of the ladder to steady it for the girl's climb. Soon her voice fell, like a message from a star:

"All right! Please join me soon!"

The coiled up ropes dropped along the face of the rock. Clothes, pick, hatchet, hammer, crowbars and other useful odds and ends were swung away into the darkness, for the moon as yet did not illumine the ring. The sailor darted into Belle Vue castle and kicked their leafy beds about the floor. Then he threw all the rifles, now five in number, over his shoulders and mounted the rope ladder, which, with the spare cords, he drew up and coiled with careful method.



They advanced cautiously.

CHAPTER XI.

THE sailor knew so accurately the position of his reliable sentinels that he could follow each phase of the imaginary conflict on the other side of the island. The first outbreak of desultory firing died away amidst a chorus of screeching and every feathered inhabitant of the isle, so Jenks assumed that the Dyaks had gathered again on the beach after riddling the scarecrows with bullets or slashing them with their heavy razor edged swords.

A hasty council was probably held, and, notwithstanding their fear of the silent company in the hollow, an advance was ultimately made along the beach. Within a few yards they encountered the invisible cord of the third spring gun. There was a report and another fierce outbreak of musketry. This was enough. Not a man would move a step nearer that abode of the dead. The next commotion occurred on the ridge near the North cape.

"At this rate I may progress," said Jenks to the girl, "they will not reach our house until daylight."

"I almost wish they were here," was the quiet reply. "I find this waiting and listening to be trying to the nerves."

They were lying on a number of ragged garments hastily spread on the ledge and peering intently into the moonlit area of Prospect park. The great rock itself was shrouded in impenetrable shadows. Even if they stood up none could see them from the ground, so dense was the darkness enveloping them.

He turned slightly and took her hand. It was cool and moist. It no more trembled than his own.

"The Dyaks are far more scared than you," he murmured, with a laugh. "Cruel and courageous as they are, they dare not face a spook."

"Then what a pity it is we cannot conjure up a ghost for their benefit. All the stories of the past week are ridiculous. Why cannot one be useful occasionally?"

The question set him thinking. Unknown to the girl the materials for a dramatic apparition were hidden amid the bushes near the well. He cudgeled his brains to remember the stage effects of juvenile days, but those needed limelight, blue flares, mirrors, phosphorus.

The absurdity of hoping to devise any such accessories while perched on a ledge in a remote island, a larger reef of the thousands in the China sea, filled him.

"What is it?" asked Iris.

He repeated his list of missing stage properties. They had nothing to do but wait. Had people in the very crux and maelstrom of existence usually discuss trivial things.

"I don't know anything about phosphorus," said the girl, "but you can obtain queer results from sulphur, and there is an old box of Norwegian matches resting at this moment on the shelf in my room. Don't you remember? They were in your pocket, and you were going to throw them away. Why, what are you doing?"

For Jenks had cast the rope ladder loose and was evidently about to descend.

"Have no fear," he said. "I will not be away for a minutes."

"If you are going down I must come with you. I will not be left here alone."

"Please do not stop me," he whispered earnestly. "You must not come. I will take no risk whatever. If you remain here you can warn me instantly. With both of us on the ground we will incur real danger. I want you to keep a sharp lookout toward Turtle beach in case the Dyaks come that way. Those who are crossing the island will not reach us for a long time."

She yielded, though unwillingly. She was tremulous with anxiety on his account.

He vanished without another word. She next saw him in the moonlight near the well. He was rustling among the shrubs, and he returned to the rock with something white in his arms, which he seemingly deposited at the mouth of the cave. He went back to the well and carried another similar burden. Then he ran toward the house. The doorway was not visible from the ledge, and she passed a few horrible moments until a low hiss beneath caught her ear. She could tell by the creak of the rope ladder that he was ascending. At last he reached her side, and she murmured, with a gasping sob:

"Don't go away again. I cannot stand it."

He thought it best to soothe her agitation by arousing interest. Still hauling in the ladder with one hand, he held out the other, on which luminous wisps were writhing like glowworms' sheen.

"You are responsible," he said. "You gave me an excellent idea, and I was obliged to carry it out."

"What have you done?"

"Arranged a fearsome bogy in the cave."

"But how?"

"It is not exactly a pleasant operation, but the only laws of necessity are those which must be broken."

She understood that he did not wish her to question him further. Perhaps curiosity, now that he was safe, might have vanquished her terror and led to another demand for enlightenment, but at that instant the sound of an angry voice and the crunching of coral away to the left drove all else from her mind.

"They are coming by way of the beach, after all," whispered Jenks.

He was mistaken in a sense. Another contingent of intermittent firing among the trees on the north side of the ridge showed that some at least of the Dyaks were advancing by their former route. The appearance of the Dyak chief on the flat belt of shingle, with his right arm slung across his breast, accompanied by not more than half a dozen followers, showed that a few hardy spirits had dared to pass the valley of death, with all its nameless terrors.

They advanced cautiously enough, as though dreading a surprise. The chief carried a bright parang in his left hand; the others were armed with guns, their swords being thrust through belts. Creeping forward on tiptoe, though their distant companions were engaged in a tremendous row, they looked a murderous gang as they passed across the open space, now brilliantly illuminated by the moon.

Jenks had a sudden intuition that the right thing to do now was to shoot the whole party. He dismissed the thought at once. All his preparations were governed by the hope that the pirates might abandon their quest after hours of fruitless search. It would be more unwise, he told himself, to precipitate hostilities. Far better avoid a conflict altogether, if that were possible, than risk the immediate discovery of his inaccessible retreat.

In other words, he was at a grave mistake, which shows how a man may err when overgoverned by the power of the woman he loves. The bold course was the right one. By killing the Dyak leader he would have deprived the enemy of the dominating influence in this dead bodies of their chief and his small force, their consternation could be turned into mad panic by a vigorous bombardment from the rock.

Probably in less than an hour after their landing the whole tribe would have rushed pellmell to the boats, cursing the folly which led them to this devil haunted island. But it serves no good purpose to say what might have been. As it was, the Dyaks, silent now and moving with the utmost caution, passed the well and were about to approach the cave when one of them saw the house.

Instantly they changed their tactics. Retreating hastily to the shade of the adjoining cliff they seemed to await the coming of reinforcements. The sailor fancied that a messenger was dispatched by way of the north sands to carry up the laggards, because the distant firing slackened, and five minutes later a fierce outbreak of yells among the trees to the right heralded a combined rush on the Belle Vue castle.

The noise made by the savages was so great, the screams of bewildered birds circling overhead so incessant that Jenks was compelled to speak quite loudly when he said to Iris:

"They have begun to sleep soundly not to be disturbed by the volleys they have fired already."

She would have answered, but he placed a restraining hand on her shoulder, for the Dyaks, quickly discovering that the hut was empty, ran toward the cave and thus came in full view.

As was Jenks could judge the foremost trio of the yelping horde were impaled on the bayonets of the cheval de frise, learning too late its formidable nature. The wounded men shrieked in agony, but their cries were drowned in a torrent of amazed shouts from their companions. Forthwith there was a stampede toward the well, the cliff, the beaches, anywhere to get away from that awesome cavern where ghosts dwelt and men fell maimed at every thrust. The sailor began leaping as far over the edge of the rock as the girl's expostulations would permit, heard a couple of men groaning beneath, while a third limped away with frantic and painful haste.

"What is it?" whispered Iris, eager herself to guess the tumult. "What has happened?"

"They have been routed by a box of matches and a few dried bones," he answered.

There was no time for further speech. He was absorbed in estimating the probable number of the Dyaks. Thus far at least seven lay dead or disabled. Moreover, he did not wish to acquaint Iris with the actual details of the artifice that had been so potent. Her allusion to the box of wax vestas and matches had given him the notion of utilising as an active ally the bleached remains of the long dead man who had long ago fallen a victim to the identical weapons of cutthroats or their associates. He had gathered the principal bones from their secret hiding place near the well, bedded them with the ends of the matches after damping the sulphur again and arranged them with ghastly effect on the pile of rubbish at the farther end of the cave, creeping under the cheval de frise for the purpose.

Though not so vivid as he wished, the pale glimmering headless skeleton in the intense darkness of the interior was appalling enough in all conscience. Fortunately the fumes of the sulphur fed on the bony substance. They endured a sufficient time to scare every Dyak who caught a glimpse of the monstrous object presented in luminous horror within the dismal cavern.

Not even the stirring exhortations of the chief, whose voice was raised in furious appeal, could induce his adherents to again approach that affrighting spot. At last the daring scoundrel himself, still wielding his naked sword, strode right into the very doorway. Stricken with sudden stupor, he gazed at the fitful gleams within. He prodded the figure in the trim with the parang. Here was something definite and solid. Then he dragged one of the wounded men out into the moonlight.

Again Jenks was seized an itching desire to send a bullet through the Dyak's head. Again he resisted the impulse. And so passed that which is vouchsafed by fate to few men—a second opportunity.

BATTERSEA.

On the 23d ult., there passed to its reward the spirit of Christopher Lake, or "Grandfather Lake," as he was familiarly known, in the community, at the ripe age of ninety-seven years, seven months and ten days. He was born and grew up on the Canadian side near the village of Inverary, but for about forty years was not long in any one residence, settling after his marriage, first on the north end of Round Lake, now owned by Charles Reed, and later removing to the home where he died, and now owned by Mr. Wm. Reid, S. E. Lake. He was converted early in life, and connected himself with the Primitive Methodists, later becoming a local preacher, and officiating in that capacity in his home for years previous to building of the first church in the community. He was possessed of a strong physical constitution, never having been sick in his life, and he retained to the end his formed traits of endurance and strength, for only a few days before his death he rode a mile, carrying a bag of wheat on his back and returning with a hundred of flour, on each occasion. He is survived by one brother, James, of Napanee, who is in his 94th year. His wife died eleven years ago, and of a family of twelve children, five survive, viz., Dr. S. K. and Simpson, of Belleville, Mrs. Wm. Wilson, Napanee, N.Y., Stephen, Prince Edward County, Reginald, Telegraph Operator, Rapids, Minn.; Mrs. Tolly, Mrs. Jas. McMinn and Mrs. M. McMinn, Desoronto. He retained the use of his mental faculties to a remarkable degree and up to a short time before his death was reading all his time in reading and writing letters to his children and friends. His extraordinary use of his brain brought on a stroke of paralysis, from which he was unable to fully recover. His end was quiet. "My peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you," was the text of a service conducted at the house, by Rev. Douglas Kingston, assisted by Rev. Dr. E. J. Lake, also of the city. A large number of friends and relatives gathered to pay their last respects to one whom they regarded as a Father in Israel.

A MILLION DOLLARS SQUANDERED.

It is estimated this sum was wasted last year by people trying to find a cure for catarrh. Foolish for suffering catarrh sufferers to do so when known that "Catarrhozone" is the only remedy that cures permanently. Other treatments only relieve, but Catarrhozone cures. Catarrhozone relieves from very returning. "I had catarrh for 15 years," writes Mrs. Wm. Fadden, of Bryson, Que. "and had tried many remedies, but Catarrhozone relieved but Catarrhozone cured me." Catarrhozone is guaranteed to cure. Catarrh—just try it.

ODESSA.

One day last week our village was visited by a band of "Bohemians" attended by a small number of covered wagons, etc. One especially was a beauty, cost said to be $600. The women sold lace, told fortunes, etc., the men buying and trading horses. They reside in Toronto during the winter.

Mr. Charlie Gordon has opened up a grocery business, on the corner of Ferguson avenue, in first-class style. We wish him success.

Mr. McColl, pastor of the Methodist church, gave a synopsis of the leaniens done at conference, last Sabbath evening, in a very racy and interesting manner. With all due regard to the one who succeeds him, we never shall have his like again in the pulpit at Odessa.

Mr. Rupert Hamilton, of the Telegram staff, Winnipeg, has been attending a newspaper convention at Toronto, and incidentally took advantage of a visit friends at Kingston, also W. A. Baker, of this village.

Mrs. James Dac came home last evening after spending three weeks with friends at Kingston.

A MODEL STRUCTURE.

Work is progressing very rapidly on the handsome building of the Napanee Canning Co., and it is expected that the work of canning will be started on time. The large main building is nearly completed, and is certainly a model structure. The floor is all cement, and the building is two stories high. A sign 4 feet high and 70 feet long has been placed on the peak of the roof. The first story of the store room will be finished this week. It is expected. This building is composed of cement blocks and will be frost-proof. Excavations for the corn shed has been started, and also for the engine room. The cooking room is already nearly completed, being now ready for the retort boilers. The first consignment of machinery is expected along in a few days. Mr. Wm. Hepburn has the contract for the carpenter work, and is to be congratulated on the speed and efficiency of the work already done. If a road were laid out and built to Dundas Street, and the Belleville road, just south of the canning factory, it would be a convenience for farmers going to the factory from that section and lots, which could be disposed of more readily, could be laid out on each side of it.

Napanee's Greatest ...Store.

THE

Robinson Co.

Make Good.

That's the Twentieth Century demand. A store promises "all wool" or "quick service" or "low prices" or "courteous treatment" or "money refunded." If it "makes good" it catches your esteem. If it flunks and fools and fails in performance it catches your condemnation. Judge your store. Does it "make good"?

Everybody has superstitions—though some folks are pleased to call them "sensibles." Ask a man why he will not sharpen a pencil at the end with the gold letters. He will tell you "the lead isn't as good there." But it is. Ask a woman why she won't start a piece of work on Friday. There's a fatality against, getting it completed. Fudge! Do you suppose this store, that you have made great, would have succeeded by waiting for the black cat to run through it or by fear of changing a window into a door.

"WHATSOEVER MAN SOWS THAT SHALL HE ALSO REAP."

"EVERY MAN SHALL BEAR HIS OWN BURDEN"

It Is Essential to the Upbuilding of a Proper Character That No Man Shall Shirk the Results of His Own Actions—Life Is Then Invested With Possibilities All the Time and Burden-Bearing Has Divine Significance

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Dr. Chas. Sheard, Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 11.—That our responsibilities are not to be shirked, but cheerfully shouldered, and that burden bearing is not an infliction, but a blessing, and essential to the right development of character, is the lesson of this sermon. The preacher takes his text from Galatians vi., 5: "Every man shall bear his own burden."

"The World's Epoch Makers" is the theme of an extensive series of books upon the makers of the world's history. But as the biographies of great men have made great books, I would tell you that the reading of those great books has been the turning point in multitudes of lives. And I know of no single biographer who has exerted greater influence upon the young men of our age and generation than the late Samuel Smiles. His "Brief Biographies" and "Life of George Stephenson" and "Self Help," with "Illustrations of Character and Conduct and Industrial Biography" and many other books and pamphlets, have made it possible for his readers to walk hand in hand with the great ones of the earth, from their humble beginnings to the time when they stood upon the pinnacles of the mountains of fame.

Of all books which Samuel Smiles has written I do not believe any of them has influenced the young men to a greater extent than "Self Help." I remember when, as a young schoolboy, I found it in my father's library. I can remember just how that book looked. I have not seen it for years. It had a dark red cover, with gilt letters. Though the leaves were pulled by black ink-yet its words were to me emblazoned in letters of gold. That book, above all other books, except the Bible in boyhood days, taught me that the greatest successes of life have not been won under advantageous circumstances, but by the hard plodders who worked up from the very bottom, and kept on working, even amid scoffs and sneers. But they worked on with manly independence, until at last the world was willing to acknowledge their greatness and to offer to these heroes and heroines its tokens of respect.

If a young man sets out to achieve success in life, he must be willing to secure it by hard work and not to look for unsheath a sword. Sofas on which to lie down and easy chairs in which to lounge are not stepping stones from which men must to illustrious thrones. When Samuel Smiles taught in "Self Help" Paul is enunciating in the words of my text. In the second verse of this chapter the apostle writes, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." That means, as far as in you lies look around you and see how many people you may be able to help. If you see a feeble old woman coming home from market give her a lift with her basket. If you see a blind man with his cane trying to feel his way across a crowded thoroughfare go and assist him. "Be eyes for the blind, as well as crutches for the lame." Always be ready to lend a helping hand to people who are in need of help, and look for opportunities your own way, depending on no man for a free ride or a push up the ladder of life. "Straighten your own shoulders," says Paul. "Tighten your own girdle for the race of life." Do not turn your swords' edges against your own breast.

The physical burden you must bear. You must learn how to develop your physical nature. In the same way that the horse trainer makes a study of his horse and the jockey makes a study of the farmer of his field of oats you must look after the health of your body. You must study how much food it is best for you to eat, what exercise it is best for you to take, what sunlight it is best for you to get in, what clothes are best for you to wear and what amount of time you shall spend at your meals to properly masticate the food which has been cooked for your use. Mark this: If you do not properly look after your own health no other person is capable of doing so for you. As you have to bear the pains and the sicknesses and the helplessness for the most part if your health is wrecked, so for the most part you yourself must look after and body. Neither is the Your mother may compel you to put on your overcoat and overshoes when you go out into a storm, but she can not restrain you from sitting in the dangerous drafts. She cannot always supervise your diet. She cannot keep you from chilling your stomach by drinking ice water when overheated. She cannot look after you and forbid you doing the five hundred little things you are accustomed to do and which are daily sapping away the foundation of your physical existence. Now, God comes to most of us in our youth and says: "Young man, here is a good, strong, sinewy body to begin with. Your body is to be the very foundation of your success in life. Make the most out of that body. Look after it. Guard it. Develop it. Bear your own physical burden. If you do not care for your body no one else can or will do it for you."

But, though physical health offers the foundation upon which to build your success" and the "temple of peace and godliness." It is amazing how men and women will deliberately batter to ruin their physical frames. They would not treat woodlands as they treat their own bodies. Hundreds they look upon as valuable, and yet they do not seem to think that their physical bodies are valuable also.

But as there are physical valetudinarians, so there are mental ones. There are scores and hundreds of physical cripples who hobble around on crutches because they have taken no care of their health, so there are scores and hundreds of mental cripples, who never would have taken advantage of independent minds, because they have made no effort to think. These mental weaklings are always depending upon others, or borrowing from others. As children, they were always mental training wrong. They have been very regular in their habits. Ever since childhood days they have been living mentally wrong.

We first met these mental cripples, or mental invalids, in the school room. One of them was our seat mate. If there was a hard problem in equations, or algebra, or trigonometry, he always sat by our side, chewing the end of his pencil and looking around the room, until we had worked out the answer, and then he calmly copied it off and turned in the work as his own. In school days, I had one of those mental leeches by my side. For days at a time he would not study his lessons. And what was my surprise in one examination, he received a higher mark than I. Although I was always studying practically in toto. He was mentally capable, but he simply would not work. We find these mental weaklings or dependents everywhere around us in the world. You have one in all probability in your domestic circle. They will do what you tell her to do, but unless you direct them they are forever thinking power she is of no more practical use in the world than a lifeless stick. She is a mental cripple. She will not take an interest in things. She will do what you tell her to do, but not one thing else will she do. And, my friend, it is your duty and mine to mentally wake up. It is our duty to prepare ourselves for mental toil. Nothing goes with which to see, it is our business to see. Having ears, it is our business to hear. God expects every man to bear a physical burden. He also expects every man to bear a mental burden.

We find these mental weaklings or dependents everywhere around us in the world. You have one in all probability in your domestic circle. They will do what you tell her to do, but unless you direct them they are forever thinking power she is of no more practical use in the world than a lifeless stick. She is a mental cripple. God expects every man to bear a physical burden. He also expects every man to bear a mental burden.

But as Paul begins mental weaklings or to the mental burdens we ought to bear, was well illustrated by Henry Ward Beecher in a sermon which he preached and made some years ago. "Here is one young man seeking financial employment. He knocks at the door of the world, and the call is sounded, 'Come in! Want employment? What can you do?' 'Oh,' answers the young man, 'I am a laborer. I can do just what I am told to do, no more and no less.' 'Then as a common laborer you go down into the lowest ditches of life, and I will give you just as hard work and poor a livelihood, for I have to tell you everything. You think nothing, therefore you shall receive precisely nothing for what you toil.' Another young man comes to the door and knocks. 'Come in! What can you do?' 'Well, I can do almost anything that I am told to do, but I am a little more one finger that thinks.' 'I am a skilled workman, I am a bookkeeper, I am a bookkeeper, I am a bookkeeper

Not one make of furnace in twenty is supplied with an ash-pan.

Without an ash-pan the ashes must be shovelled into a pail or some other receptacle for removal—means dust in the eyes, ruined clothes, extra work ; a dirty disagreeable job—the meanest part of furnace 'tending.

The Sunshine Furnace has an ash-pan which catches all the ashes, and slides in and out easily. Has two handles for carrying. No shovelling, sweeping or dirt.

This is only one of a dozen good features possessed by the Sunshine Furnace, none of which are found on any other furnace.

There never was and never will be universal panacea, in one remedy, for all the ills which flesh is heir to—the very nature of many curatives being such that while they relieve one ailment they superinduce diseases resulted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinlan's Nervuro available in a sound unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills, and its gradual and judicious use, the frail system is built up into normal existence and strength by the infused vitality which is the result on Nature's own restorative. It relieves and cures all forms of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life has become a disease, and by its stimulating, strengthening and sustaining and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, by giving stimulated, courses throughout the system, strengthening it to healthful activity a necessary result, strengthening the brain, frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand and require a healthful exercise of their functions of the system, thereby making it complete. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their superlative remedy, Dr. Quinlan's Nervuro, and gauge by the opinion of scientists, this now approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

There's a story of a farmer and his son driving a load to market. Of the team they were driving one was a steady reliable old gray mare, the other a fractious young colt, new to the work. On the way the wagon was stalled and the young horse suddenly confronted by a "What'll we do father?" said the younger man. "I said you'd be a h-l of a fool if you didn't know enough to whip the old gray." That homely compliment to the old gray mare's "better horse" suggests how often when there is some extra strain to be borne it is laid on the woman's back. How many a wife and mother has last under the added weight of some "last straw," and broken down. Many have found relief through life can gain real strength from Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—what would relieve one in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinlan's Nervuro available in a sound unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills, and its gradual and judicious use, the frail system is built up into normal existence and strength by the infused vitality which is the result on Nature's own restorative. SHARP—BELL.

The home of Mr. J. Albert Bell, Marven, was the scene of a very pretty wedding last Tuesday morning, June 13th, 1905, when his daughter Lotta E. was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Clarence Lucas Sharp, son of the late Lucas Sharp, Marven. The officiating ministers were Rev. A. P. Stanley, brother-in-law of the groom, and Rev. W. S. Boyce, B.D., pastor of Merven Street. The bridal party entered the room, while Mendelssohn's wedding march was being played, and stood beneath an arch of evergreen and white bells. The bride wore a dainty dress of dark brown silk veil, cream chiffon trimmings, and carried carnations and maiden hair ferns. A cousin of the bride, little Miss Jessie Lloyd, acted as flower girl. She carried a basket of carnations and ferns and the wedding ring on a little silver plate, reading among the flowers. After the ceremony the guests congratulated the young couple, and all sat down to a sumptuous repast. The room was beautifully decorated with flowers and evergreens, and lighted by colored candles. The bride received many useful and costly presents, among them was a gold watch and chain, the gift from the groom. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp are spending their honeymoon in Montreal.

—Mr. James Bryden, of Flinton, was arrested on Saturday last, by Chief Crean and H. W. Huff, on a capias and brought to Napanee Saturday night. He was left in charge of Constable York, at his home, and during Sunday night, between the hours of one and five he decided to be up and away and in the morning Constable York found his man was missing. Mr. Bryden was arrested on a charge of leaving the country and defrauding his creditors. The case seems a mixed-up one as it is said, the debt he owes to Murphy, Gordon & Co., bankers of Tweed, is one contracted by his brother, but the notes to the amount of some $1,600 were endorsed by him. Universal sympathy is expressed for Mr. Bryden, who is highly respected, so much so that four of his neighbors drove in from Flinton early on Monday morning, to go his bail.

CAMDEN EAST.

For last week.

The Camden East baseball team (juniors) came home Saturday night from Napanee with another victory added to their already long list. On the 24th May Napanee came to Camden East and went home defeated by a score of 19-0. Camden East returned the match in Napanee on Saturday, June 3d. Both teams had stronger batteries than at Camden East. From start to finish Napanee hadn't a chance of winning. Smith shut them out for six innings, one after the other. They scored 2 in the first, 2 in the second, and 3 in the eighth. The Camden East team made six runs in the fifth, and from that time Napanee lost all hope of winning. The game ended with the score 15-7 in favor of Camden East. Mr. Roy Smith officiated as umpire, and his decisions satisfied everybody. The 1903 record for the Camden East juniors is good as they have won five games and not lost any.

ODESSA.

Last Wednesday evening a treat was given in the C. M. church, consisting of an account of a few months' cruise from Kingston, via New York, across the Atlantic, through the Straits of Gibraltar along the Mediterranean, touching at the way many points of interest, and so on to the Holy Land, by Mrs. Crumley, of Kingston. She gave great pleasure to her hearers by her clear enunciation, her pleasing graceful manner and her complete knowledge of her subject, which might easily have taken two full evenings before the story was fully completed her journey. The choir gave a piece, followed by an illustrating general exercise of the convention at Oshawa, by Mrs. (Rev.) McColl, who will give a detailed account of the same at the regular meeting of the W. M. S. on the 21st. This was followed by a duet by Mrs. VanLuven, of Napanee; Miss Hall, of the latter place, presided at the organ. No need of saying it was listened to with great pleasure, as her singing is well and favorably known. She was encored before the close of the meeting. Miss Hall gave an organ recital which is well rendered, according to the musical critics. By the way, much praise is due Mr. Jno. Gordon, Mr. Horace Wallace and some of the ladies for the decoration of the church.

A presentation was made at the last meeting of the W.M.S. to the ex-president, Mrs. (Rev.) McColl, of a beautiful sterling silver fruit spoon and fork, gold, as a slight memento of the esteem in which she was held. All were sorry at the parting. ABOUT THE BY-LAW.

To Editor of The Beaver:

I do not know very much about either gas or electricity, but I have always heard that electricity was the much more expensive, unless it was operated by very cheap water power.

I do know that the two Electric Companies which tried to do business in this town have spent between them fully fifty-thousand dollars which appparently is a dead loss. I believe the Napanee Company has expended fully $20,000.00, and the Scott Company more than $30,000.00. Both these Companies had water power.

What I would like to know is why these Companies spent $50,000.00 and never made or pay, how the town is going to do better with a more expensive process, that is no water power, but all steam?

Yours truly,
CITIZEN.

Napanee, June 20th, 1905.

ANSWER TO TAXPAYER.

Mr. Editor.—In your last week's issue a correspondent signing himself "Taxpayer" asks the question "should you vote for the by-law?" and he seemed to answer it in the negative by a flippant manner to denounce the enterprise. The very vehemence of the attack demonstrates the fact that "Taxpayer" is not safe guide to follow. As he provides no proof to obtain for his figures they amount to nothing, and as he is not sufficiently honest to sign his identity we must decline to accept "Taxpayer" as an authority. However we have an inkling that "taxpayer" is not in a position to let us have an unprejudiced opinion.

Let us view the facts as they are. We have no light in Napanee at present and no prospect of obtaining any unless the town itself provides it. The town council asks the question "Shall an electric light which will be self sustaining after allowing 5% on the capital cost for the service to the town? Incorporated Towns." The very answer to the attack demonstrates the fact that "taxpayer" does not safe guide to follow. As he provides no proof to obtain for his figures they amount to nothing, and as he is not sufficiently honest to sign his identity we must decline to accept "Taxpayer" as an authority. However we have an inkling that "taxpayer" is not in a position to let us have an unprejudiced opinion.

Let us view the facts as they are. We have no light in Napanee at present and no prospect of obtaining any unless the town itself provides it. The town council asks the question "Shall an electric light which will be self sustaining after allowing 5% on the capital cost for the service to the town? Incorporated Towns." The very answer to this question should be welcomed by every taxpayer. Let us have no more twaddle like that of "taxpayer."

Yours respectfully,
W. S. HERRINGTON.

Near Cardinal Rev. J. E. Lindsay met with an accident; a strap on the reach broke, letting the tongue of the buggy down, which tripped Mr. Lindsay was pulled out over the road-board and struck his head. He escaped with a cut and scar.

During the progress of Sunday afternoon last, the residence of Mr. William Bonter, third concession of Tyendinaga, was struck by lightning, the bolt going down the chimney and store pipes, doing a great deal of damage. It then went through the floor into the cellar, finally making its little damage. Mrs. Jones and two nieces, Misses Armstrong and Miss Florence Jones, who were in the room at the time, providentially escaped serious injury.

While Gerald, aged 22, a pupil at the Deaf and Dumb Institute at Belleville, was drowned while bathing on Monday evening. Gerald was standing on the wharf. Instead of diving into the water, he jumped, falling into the water striking heavily upon his stomach and struck the bottom, unable to get his breath. He arose in an attitude which he spoke about some of his companions threw an oar towards him, but Gerald was in such that he was unable to grasp it and he soon sank, to rise no more.

Hot weather—we will have the warmest in years. Keep your hair brilliant and lamb in one of our refrigerators. Boyle & Son.

THE WINGS OF THE MORNING

BY LOUIS TRACY.

Another vehement harangue by the chief goaded some venturesome spirits into carrying their wounded comrade out of sight, presumably to the hut. Inspired by their leader's fearless example, they even removed the third injured Dyak from the vicinity of the cave, but the celerity of their retreat caused the wretch to bawl in agony.

The next undertaking was no sooner appreciated by the sailor than he hurriedly caused Iris to shelter herself beneath the tarpaulin, while he covered close to the door of the ledge, leaving only through the screen of tall grasses. They kindled a fire near the well. Soon its ruddy glare lit up the dark cave with fantastic flickerings and drew scintillations from the weapons and ornaments of the hideously picturesque horde gathered in its vicinity.

They spoke a language whose hard vowels and nasal resonance and ate what he judged to be dry fish, millets and strips of tough preserved meat, which they cooked on small iron skewers stuck among the glowing embers. His heart sank as he counted sixty-one, all told, assembled within forty yards of the ledge. Probably several others were guarding the boats or prowling about the island. Indeed, events proved that more than eighty men had come ashore in three large sampans, roomy and fleet craft, well fitted for piratical excursions up river estuaries or along a coast.

They were mostly barelegged rascals, wearing Malay hats, loose jackets reaching to the knee and sandals. One man differed essentially from the others. He was habited in the conventional attire of an Indian Mohammedan, and his skin was brown, while the swarthy Dyaks were yellow beneath the dirt. Jenks thought from the manner in which his turban was tied that he must be a Punjabi Mussulman—very likely an escaped convict from the Andamans.

The most careful scrutiny did not reveal any arms of precision. They all carried muzzle loaders, either antiquated flintlocks or guns sufficiently modern to be fitted with nipples for percussion caps.

Each Dyak, of course, sported a parang and dagger-like creese; a few bore spears, and about a dozen shouldered a long straight piece of bamboo. The nature of this implement the sailor could not determine at the moment.

In the neighborhood of the fire an animated discussion took place. Though it was easy to see that the chief was all paramount, his fellow tribesmen exercised a democratic right of free speech and outspoken opinion.

Flashing eyes and expressive hands were turned toward the cave and hut. Once when the debate grew warm the chief snatched up a burning branch and held it over the blackened embers of the fire extinguished by Jenks. He seemed to draw some definite conclusion from an examination of the charcoal, and the argument thereforth proceeded with less emphasis. Whatever it was that he said evidently carried conviction.

Iris, nestling close to the sailor, whispered:

"Do you know what he has found out?"

"I can only guess that he can tell by the appearance of the burged wood how long it is since it was extinguished. Clearly they agree with him."

"Then they know we are still here?"

"Either here or gone within a few hours. In any case they will make a thorough search of the island at daybreak."

"Will it be dawn soon?"

"Yes. Are you tired?"

"A little cramped, that is all."

"Don't think I am foolish. Can you manage to sleep?"

"Sleep! With those men so near!"

"Yes. We do not know how long they will remain. We must keep up our strength. Sleep, next to food and drink, is a prime necessity."

"If it will please you I will try," she said, with such sweet readiness to obey his slightest wish that the wonder is he did not kiss her then and there. By previous instruction she knew exactly what to do. She crept quietly back until well ensconced in the niche widened and hollowed for her accommodation. There so secluded was she from the outer world of horror and peril that the coarse voices beneath only reached her in a murmur. Pulling one end of the tarpaulin over her, she stretched her weary limbs on a litter of twigs and leaves, composed herself and the man she loved to God's keeping and, wonderful though it may seem, was soon slumbering peacefully.

The statement may sound passing strange to civilized ears, accustomed only to the routine of daily life and not inured to danger and wild surroundings. But the soldier who has snatched a hasty doze in the trenches, the sailor who has slept through a fierce gale buffeting the walls of his frail ark, can appreciate the reason why Iris, weary and surfeited with excitement, would have slept were she certain that the next sunrise would mark her last hour on earth.

Jenks, too, composed himself for a brief rest. He felt assured that there was not the remotest chance of their lofty perch being found out before daybreak, and the first faint streaks of dawn would awaken him.

When the morning breeze swept over the ocean and the stars were beginning to pale before the pink glory flung broadcast through the sky by the yet invisible sun, the sailor was aroused by the quiet fluttering of a bird about to settle on the rock, but startled by the sight of him.

His faculties were at once on the alert, though he little realized the danger betokened by the bird's rapid dart into the void. Turning first to peer at Iris, he satisfied himself that she was still asleep. Her lips were slightly parted in a smile. She might be dreaming of summer and England. He noiselessly wormed his way to the verge of the rock and looked down through the grass roots.

The Dyaks were already stirring. Some were replenishing the fire, others were drawing water, cooking, eating, smoking long thin stemmed pipes with absurdly small bowls or oiling their limbs and weapons with impartial energy. The chief yet lay stretched on the sand, but when the first beams of the sun gilded the waters a man stooped over him, the prostrate one said something that caused the sleeper to rise stiffly, supporting himself on his unlujured arm. They at once went off together toward Jenks' point.

"They have found the boat," thought Jenks. "Well, they are welcome to all the information it affords."

The chief gave some order, at which they all hung back sheepishly. Cursing them in choice Malay, the chief seized a thick faggot and strode in the direction of the cave. Goaded into activity by his truculent demeanor, some followed him, and Jenks, unable to see, but listening anxiously, knew that they were tearing the charred logs from their its supports. Nevertheless none of the working party entered the excavation. They feared the parched bones that shone by night.

As he had not been able to complete the communicating shaft it was not now of vital importance should the Dyaks penetrate to the interior. Yet he thanked the good luck that had showered such a heap of rubbish over the spot containing his chief stores and covering the vein of gold. Wild as these fellows were, they well knew the value of the precious metal, and if by chance they lighted upon such a well defined lode they might not quit the island for weeks.

At last on a command from the chief the Dyaks scattered in various directions. Some turned toward Europa point, but the majority made for the east along Turtle beach or by way of the lagoon. Prospect park was deserted. They were scouring both sections of the island in full force.

The quiet waters of the ledge took no needless risks. Though it was impossible to believe any stratagem had been planned for his special benefit, an accident might betray him. With the utmost circumspection he rose on all fours and, with comprehensive glance, examined trees, plateau and both strips of beach for signs of a lurking foe. He need have no fear. Of all places in the island the Dyaks least imagined that their quarry had lain all night within earshot of their encampment.

Jenks slid back down the ledge and gently wakened Iris. She sat up instantly and gazed at him with wondering eyes.

Fearful lest she should forget her surroundings, he placed a warning finger on his lips.

"Oh," she said in a whisper, "are they still here?"

He told her what had happened and suggested that they should have something to eat while the coast was clear beneath. She needed no second bidding, for the long vigil of the previous night had made her very hungry, and the two breakfasted right royally, on biscuit, cold fowl, ham and good water.

In this, the inner section of their refuge, they could be seen only by a bird or by a man standing on the distant rocky shelf that formed the southern extremity of the opposite cliff, and the sailor kept a close lookout in that direction.

Iris was about to throw the remains of the feast into an empty oil tin provided for refuse when Jenks restrained her.

"No," he said smilingly. "Scraps should be the first course next time. We must not waste an atom of food."

"How thoughtless of me!" she exclaimed. "Please tell me you think they will go away today."

But the sailor flung himself flat on the ledge and grasped a rifle.

"Be still, on your life!" he said. "Squeeze into your corner. There is a Dyak on the opposite cliff."

True enough, a man had climbed to that unhappily placed rocky table and was shouting something to a confrere high on the cliff over the creek. As yet he had not seen them nor even noticed the place where they were concealed. The sailor imagined from the Dyak's gestures that he was communicating the uselessness of further search on the western part of the island.

When the conversation ceased he hoped the loud voiced savage would descend. But no! The scout looked into the valley, at the well, the house, the cave. Still he did not see the ledge. At that unlucky moment three birds, driven from the trees on the crest by the passage of the Dyaks, flew down the face of the cliff and began a circling quest for some safe perch on which to alight.

Jenks swore with an emphasis not the less earnest because it was muttered and took steady aim at the Dyak's left breast. The birds fluttered about in ever smaller circles. Then one of them dropped easily on to the lip of the rock. Instantly his bright eyes encountered those of the man, and he darted off with a scream that brought his mates after him.

The Dyak evidently noted the behavior of the birds—his only lore was the reading of such signs—and gazed intently at the ledge. Jenks he could not distinguish behind the screen of grass. He might perhaps see some portion of the tarpaulin covering the stores, but at the distance it must resemble a weather beaten segment of the cliff. Yet something puzzled him. After a steady scrutiny he turned and yelled to others on the beach.

The crucial moment had arrived. Jenks pressed the trigger, and the Dyak hurtled through the air, falling headlong out of sight.

The sound of this, the first shot of real warfare, awoke Rainbow island into tremendous activity. The winged life of the place filled the air with raucous cries, while shouting Dyaks scurried in all directions. Several came down to the valley. Those nearest the fallen man picked him up and carried him to the well. He was quite dead, and, although small his outer injuries they soon found the bullet wound, they evidently did not know whence the shot came, for those to whom he shouted had no inkling of his presence, and the slight haze from the rifle was instantly swept away by the breeze.

Iris could hear the turmoil beneath, and she tremulously asked:

"Are they going to attack us?"

"Not yet," was the reassuring answer. "I killed the fellow who saw us before he could tell the others."

It was a bold risk, and he had taken it, though now the Dyaks knew for certain their prey had not escaped there was no prospect of their speedy departure. Nevertheless the position was not utterly hopeless. None of the enemy could tell how the fallen man's companion had been shot. Many among the excited horde jabbering beneath actually looked at the cliff crest and over again, yet failed to note the potentialities of the ledge, with its few tufts of grass growing where seeds had apparently been blown by the wind or dropped by passing birds.

Jenks understood, of course, that the real danger would arise when they visited the scene of their one effective disaster. Even then the wavering influence of chance might cast the issue in his favor. He could only wait, with ready rifle, with the light of battle lowering in his eyes. Of one thing at least he was certain—before they conquered him he would levy a terrible toll.

He glanced back at Iris. Her face was pale beneath its mask of sun brown.

The chief was listening intently to the story of the Dyak who saw the dead man totter and fall. He gave some quick order. Followed by a score or more of his men, he walked rapidly to the foot of the cliff where they found the lifeless body.

Jenks stole one more hasty glance at Iris. The chief and the greater number of his followers were out of sight behind the rocks. Some of them must now be climbing to that fatal ledge. Was this the end?

Iris bent forward sufficiently in her sheltering niche to permit her to gaze with wistful tenderness upon Jenks. She knew he would dare all for her sake. She could only pray and hope.

Suddenly a clamor of discordant yells fell upon her ears. Jenks rose to his knees. The Dyaks had discovered their refuge and were about to open fire. He offered them a target less perilous to Iris were not thoroughly screened.

"Keep close," he said. "They have found us. Lead will be flying around soon."

She flinched back into the crevice; the sailor fell prone. Four bullets spat into the ledge, of which three pierced the tarpaulin and one flattened itself against the rock.

Then Jenks took up the tale. So curiously constituted was this man that, although he ruthlessly shot the savage who first spied out their retreat, he was swayed only by the dictates of stern necessity. There was a feeble chance that further bloodshed might be averted. That chance had passed. Very well. The enemy must start the dreadful game about to be played. They had thrown the gage, and he answered them. Four times did Jenks' rifle carry death, unseen, almost unfelt, across the valley.

The Dyak hurtled through the air.

Ere the fourth Dyak collapsed limply where he stood others were there, firing at the little puff of smoke above the grass. They got in a few shots, most of which sprayed at various angles off the face of the cliff. But they waited for no more. When the lever of the Lee-Metford was shoved home for the fifth time the opposing crest were rid of all opponents save two, and they lay motionless.

The fate of the flanking detachment was either unperceived or unheeded by the Dyaks left in the vicinity of the house and well. Astounded by the firing that burst forth in midair, Jenks had cleared the dangerous rock before they realized that here, above their heads, were the white man and the maid whom they sought.

With stupid zeal they blazed away furiously, only succeeding in showering fragments of splintered stone into the eagle's nest. And the sailor smiled. He quietly picked up an old coat, rolled it into a ball and pushed it into sight amidst the grass. Then he squirmed round on his stomach and took up a position ten feet away. Of course those who still carried loaded guns discharged them at the bundle of rags, whereupon Jenks thrust his rifle beyond the edge of the rock and leaned over.

Three Dyaks fell before the remainder made up their minds to run. Once convinced, however, that running was good for their health, they moved with much celerity. The remaining cartridges in the magazine slackened the pace of two of their number. Jenks dropped the empty weapon and seized another. He stood up now and sent a quick reminder after the rearmost pirate. The others had disappeared toward the locality where their leader and his diminished troop were gathered, not daring to again come within range of the whistling dumdums. The sailor, holding his rifle as though pheasant shooting, bent forward and sought a belated opponent, but in vain. There was no sound save the wailing of birds, the soft sough of the sea and the yelling of the three wounded men in the house, who knew not what terrors threatened and vainly bawled for succor.

Again Jenks could look at Iris. Her face was bleeding. The sight maddened him.

"My God!" he groaned. "Are you wounded?"

She smiled bravely at him.

"It is nothing," she said—"a mere splash from the rock which cut my forehead."

He dared not go to her. He could only hope that it was no worse, so he turned to examine the valley once more for vestige of a living foe.

CHAPTER XII.

THOUGH his eyes, like live coals, glowered with sullen fire at the strip of sand and the rocks in front, his troubled brain paid perfunctory heed to his task. The stern sense of duty, the ingrained force of long years of military discipline and soldierly thought, compelled him to keep watch and ward over his fortress, but he could not help asking himself what would happen if Iris were seriously wounded.

There was one enemy more potent than these skulking Dyaks, a foe more irresistible than his might, more pitiless in his strength, whose assaults would tax to the utmost their powers of resistance. In another hour the sun would be high in the heavens, pouring his ardent rays upon them and drying the blood in their veins.

Hitherto the active life of the island, but more especially the hut or cave, the power of unrestricted movement and the possession of water in any desired quantity robbed the tropical heat of the day of its chief terrors. Now all was changed. Instead of working amid grateful foliage they were bound in the fierce glare of the heaven whose glow with radiated energy and give off scorching gusts like unto the opening of a furnace door.

This he had foreseen all along. The tarpaulin would yield them some degree of uneasy protection, and they both were in a perfect physical condition. But—if Iris were wounded! If the extra strain brought fever in its wake! That way he saw nothing but black despair, to be ended for her by delirium and merciful death, for him by a Berserk rush among the Dyaks and one last mad fight against overwhelming numbers.

Then the girl's voice reached him, self reliant, almost cheerful:

"Can you tell me how near that the cut has stopped bleeding. It is only a scratch."

So a kindly Providence had spared them yet a respite. The cloud passed from his mind, the gathering mist from his eyes. In that instant he thought he detected a slight rustling among the trees where the cliff shelved up from the house. Standing as he was on the edge of the rock, this was a point he could not guard against.

Where the danger threatened he recalled his scattered sensee he stepped back to speak to her, and in the same instant a bullet struck the granite face against the rock overhead. Iris had unwittingly saved him from a serious, perhaps fatal, wound.

He stepped to the extreme right of the ledge and boldly looked into the trees beneath. Two Dyaks were there, belated wanderers cut off from the main body. They, trigger, and the undergrowth for safety, but one of them was too late. Jenks' rifle reached him in the reverberating concussion, tossed back and forth by the echoing rocks, drowned his parting scream.

In the plenitude of restored vigor the sailor waited for no counter demonstration. He turned and crouchingly approached the southern end of his parapet. His keen eye, screen of grass he could discern the long black hair and yellow face of a man who lay on the sand and twisted his head around to ease the further effort. The distance, oft measured, was ninety yards, the target practically a six inch bullseye. Jenks took careful aim, fired, and a whiff of sand flew up.

Perhaps he had used too fine a sight and plowed a furrow beneath the Dyak's ear. He only heard a faint yell, but the surprising head vanished, and there were no more volunteers for that particular service.

He was still peering at the place when a cry of unmitigated anguish came from Iris:

"Oh, come quick! Our water! The casks have burst!"

It was quite true. Jenks had torn the tarpaulin from off their stores and he was wildly striving with both hands to stem the precious drops collected in the small hollows of the ledge that he realized the full magnitude of the disaster which had befallen them.

During the final exchange of fire before the enemy vacated the cliff several bullets had pierced the tarpaulin. By a stroke of exceeding bad fortune two of the largest casks of the water barrels and started the staves. The contents quietly ebbed away beneath the broad sheet and, flowing toward by reason of the sharp slope of the ledge, percolated through the fault. Iris and he, notwithstanding their frenzied efforts, were not able to save more than a pint of gritty discolored fluid. The rest, infinitely more valuable to them than all the diamonds of De Beers, was now oozing through the native sandstone cut by centuries of storm, dripping upon the headless skeleton in the cave, soaking down to the very heart of their buried treasure.

Jenks was so appalled by this catastrophe that Iris became alarmed. As yet she did not grasp its awful significance, but that he, her hero, so brave, so confident in the face of hordes of foes, should betray such sense of irredeemable loss frightened her much more than the incident itself.

Her lips whitened. Her words became incoherent.

"Tell me," she whispered. "I can bear anything but silence. Tell me, I implore you. Is it so bad?"

The sight of her distress sobered him. He ground his teeth together as a man does who submits to a painful operation and resolves not to flinch beneath the knife.

"It is very bad," he said; "not quite the end, but near it."

"The end," she bravely answered, "is death. We are living and uninjured. You must fight on. If the Lord wills it we shall not die."

He looked in her blue eyes and saw there the light of heaven. Her glance did not droop before his. In such moments heart speaks to heart without concealment.

"We still have a little water," she cried. "Fortunately we are not thirsty. You have not forgotten our supply of champagne and brandy?"

He could only fall in with her mercifully feigned gayety in the dreadful truth to its own evil fume. In their flight nook the power of the sun had not made itself felt. By ordinary computation it was about 9 o'clock. Long before noon they would be grilling. Throughout the next few hours they must suffer the torture of Dives with one meager pint of water to share between them. Of course the wine and spirit must be shunned like a pestilence. To touch either under such conditions would be courting heat, apoplexy and death. And next day!

He tightened his jaws before he answered:

"We will console ourselves with a bottle of champagne for dinner. Meanwhile I bear our friends shouting to those left on this side of the island. I must take an active interest in the conversation."

He grasped a rifle and lay down on the ledge, already gratefully warm. There was a good deal of sustained shouting going on. Jenks thought he recognized the chief's voice giving instructions to those who had come from Smugglers' cove and were now standing on the beach near the quarry.

"I wonder if he is hungry," he thought. "If so, I will interfere with the commissariat."

Iris peeped forth at him.

"Mr. Jenks!"

"Yes," without turning his head. He knew it was an ordinary question.

"May I come too?"

"What, expose yourself on the ledge!"

"Yes, even that. I am so tired of sitting here alone."

"Well, there is no danger at present. But they might chance to see you, and you remember what I"—

"Yes, I remember quite well. If that is all"— There was a rustle of garments. "I am very mannish in appearance. If you promise not to look at me I will join you."

To be continued.

"CUBAN DIARRHOEA.

U. S. soldiers who served in Cuba during the Spanish war, know what this disease is, and that ordinary remedies have little effect upon it. Not much water, Cuban diarrhoea is always dangerous as a mild attack of cholera. There is one remedy, however, that can always be depended upon as will be seen by the following letter from Mrs. Minnie Jacobs of Houston, Texas, "I hereby certify that Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy cured my husband of a severe attack of Cuban diarrhœa, which he brought home from Cuba. We had several doctors but they did him no good. One bottle of this remedy cured him, as our neighbors will testify. I thank God for so valuable a medicine." DISAPPEARANCE OF A LANDMARK.

Work of Removal Commenced on Wednesday, June 21st, 1905.

A good deal of local interest has been aroused by the work of removal of the Eastern Methodist church. Mr. George Clift is engaged in the work of taking down the steeple and the removal of the woodwork, and progress will most likely be rapid and satisfactory, as it is somewhat difficult labor of the taking down of the spire is accomplished. It is understood that the congregation will gather for the last time in the old church on Sunday next for Sabbath services, and that a great rally under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid will be held on Tuesday evening, and that subsequently until the new church is ready for occupancy services will be held in the Opera House, which will conduce ably provide for Sunday services, and in the Town Hall for week evening services. This of course is not officially announced, but next Sunday's announcements may be forecasted with probable accuracy.

It was on Monday, 29th April, 1861, over 44 years ago, that the work of tearing down the old brick church that gave way for the present stone structure, was started, the Rev. Francis Berry being the pastor at that time. The present stone church was completed on the 28th day of September, 1862. The late Geo. Clift, sr., was the superintendent of the work, and the following gentlemen were employed thereon:—Messrs. John Cliff, John R. Richardson, John Crysdale, George Crysdale, T. G. Carscallen, Donald McLiver, James Wallace, George Sexsmith, Leonard Pearson, Trayton Pearson, Jas. Pearson, and the late George Newlands, Kingston, had the contract for the stone work.

Strange to say the work of removing the present edifice is under the superintendence of Mr. Geo. Clift, jr., a worthy successor to his late father. The men employed at the hazardous job of tearing down the spire are Messrs. Archibald Howers, and Chas. and Edw. Markle.

The new church will cover over three times as much ground space as the present one, being 120x55 feet. The Sabbath School will be on the same level with the auditorium of the church, separated by sliding doors, and the two rooms will have a seating capacity of 1,000 people. The floor will be amphitheatre style, that is sloping towards the pulpit, with seats in a half circle.

TAMWORTH.

Ed. Perry, Camden, was in town Tuesday.

Christ church will hold their strawberry social on the rectory lawn on this Saturday evening.

The members of St. Andrew's Presbyterian congregation, with their pastor, are to be congratulated on the very fine shed they are having erected for the horses. Mr. George Reid has the contract. The building is 120 feet long, and will be finished this week.

A grand strawberry and ice cream entertainment, under the auspices of the ladies of St. Andrew's church, Tamworth, will be held on the lawn of Mr. George Kitchen, on Tuesday evening, June 27th. The ladies and managing committee of the congregation are hard at work to make this one of the best entertainments of the season. Come one and all, and spend a pleasant evening with us.

The Bear-de-lis souvenirs have arrived at Floyd & Co.'s and look well. They retail at 25c and 50c. The seal of old Tamworth is surrounded by a circle on which is engraved "Souvenir of Tamworth, Ontario." Already our citizens are seen with them on.

Tim. Hough, Camden East, was in town Monday.

Our town will in future have several new cement walks.

A tramp was found near town on Sunday and arrested. He was sent to central prison for two years.

Geo. Kitchen and wife, on arriving home after their wedding tour, were given a kitchen shower which included a fine lot of valuable presents.

Mr. John Stewart spent Wednesday in town. At the last meeting of the ministers and laymen of the Tamworth District of the Methodist church, which was recently held in Marlbank, the following resolution was carried unanimously by a standing vote:—

"Having heard that our esteemed chairman, Rev. W. H. Adams, anticipates removing from this district, we, the members of the district meeting now assembled, desire to express our appreciation of the services rendered during the two years he has spent here. His ability and urbanity have commended him to us all; the relations existing between us have been of the most cordial and pleasant character, and we hope and pray that he may be given much success in the field to which he has been invited.

CROWDING THE CHURCH OUT

The "Halfway Church," Neither Uptown Nor Downtown in a Large City, Led by a Consecrated Band of Workers Is a Desideratum In the Modern Life of the Urban Population of Any Country.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frank De Witt Talmage, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 18.—In every large city there is a considerable population to whom this sermon peculiarly applies. The preacher voices their plea for the gospel, and urges that it be no longer rejected. The text is Acts xvi, 9, "Come over into Macedonia, and help us."

"Nearby Macedonians! What do you mean?" says some one. "Is there any class of people living near to me who have not the gospel preached to them as it ought to be preached? Why, nearly all my life I have been living in one of our large cities. I have sat under some of the great preachers of the world. Surely all those who live near to me have the same kind of gospel advantages I have." No, my friend, you are wrong. There are scores, and hundreds, and thousands, and tens of thousands who are perishing. Before I am through with my subject I hope to prove to you that my premise is true, for to-day I am about to speak for the most part to those who have lived near by all their lives in a large city.

Where did you go to church when you first came to town? "Oh," you say, "I used to worship in such and such a street. The great Dr. So-and-so preached there. But I moved away, and most of my old neighbors moved away long ago. The boarding house element crowded us out. The region where I used to live is now filled with 'roomers.'" Indeed! I suppose very few people are now living in your old street. "Oh, no; quite the contrary," you answer. "Where there used to be one family living in a house, there are now sometimes twenty or thirty people. Light housekeeping in many instances has made each double house a whole family." Indeed! Then, with the increased population swarming there, I suppose your old church is crowded to the doors. I suppose your old Sunday school is five times larger than it was in the days of yore." No, my answer. "I only wish that were true. I have been told that more than I have ever loved it. But the trouble is the wealthy people moved away. Then old Dr. So-and-so got a call to heaven. Then the people who remained called a fine young man, but he could not make the church go. He struggled on and on. They could not pay him a salary sufficient to live upon and he had to leave. Now the old church has a very ordinary man in the pulpit. The seats are not by any means full. The whole work there seems to be at a standstill. What is being done to-day in the fashionable churches of the people are there and the next they are gone. I am afraid the old church is geographically doomed."

Your old church's work geographically doomed? What! Can such a condition exist at our very doors? There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of a city's population swarming around those old churches. Shall all our best church strongholds be turned to secular uses? Such a condition must not exist. My theme to-day is a call for help for what is termed the deserted church of the boarding house regions of a large city. I would make a plea not for the downtown church, which is situated in the heart of a business centre of a great city. I have been pastor of such a church as that in Pittsburg, and I know they can be made useful and prosperous if right methods are adopted. I make not a plea for the church situated in the residential region. I have such a church as that in the beautiful city of Los Angeles. It a man does his work there, it is not difficult to gather in the families. But I make a plea for the "halfway" city church, the church which is not downtown nor uptown. I plead for the church which is rapidly being overrun by rooming houses and by the boarding house element—the "halfway church," which is in a region congested with multitudes of people who have not the gospel preached to them as it ought to be. I make a plea for such a church because I have been pastor of one and I know the almost insurmountable obstacles which it has to overcome.

The "halfway church" of the large city to be a spiritual success must have, in the first place, an earnest band of strong, unbeclouded men and women who for the church's sake are ready to help the minister and fill the official positions of the church. I mean I have tried gospel veterans in its boards of elders, deacons and trustees. It must have able leaders in the Sunday school who know the Bible and are ready to stay by the classes under all conditions. It must have these men and women not as visitors, but as members in good and regular standing, who are identified with the church because there they know they can best serve their Lord and Master and there they will always be in their places.

Why do I put such an emphasis upon this plea for consecrated men and women in the official boards? A true, down leader cannot be created in a day or a week or a month or a year any more than a lawyer, a doctor, an engineer, a prima donna, can be created in a minute. Supposing I should enter your store some day and say, "Now, Mr. Jones, let me take a trip to Europe and have a five months' vacation." "Oh," you would say to me, "you cannot go. I have no one with whom to leave the store." "No one? Why, what are you talking about? There are clerks galore. You have at least twenty men and women in your employ." "I know it," you answer, "but the selling of them all is competent to take my place. They are all young meh. I cannot make a merchant of a boy or a girl and boy in a minute any more than you could make a Thomas A. Edison in a minute out of a common lad."

youth who has just matriculated in the scientific school of Princeton." Yet the simple fact remains that the modern church work is the most important of all work, the leading Christian men of a city will get up almost every week and walk out of these "halfway churches." Thus they will practically say to the minister who is in charge, "Young man, fill your session with a lot of young people who are utterly inexperienced. Grab right and left for your Sunday school superintendent and teachers, no matter whether they know the Bible or no. We want to be and live on the aristocratic boulevards and go to a certain church, and we have done along as best you can." Thus these leading men, seemingly without the least compunction, desert their gospel ship when it is in danger of sinking.

Is it surprising that these "halfway churches" are deteriorating? When their strong church leaders desert them in this way? Let me to-day enter one of our large city churches in the residential districts and take away fifteen of its powerful consecrated church leaders. The next year have another fifteen depart, and so on year by year. Would not the spiritual work of that church be doomed? Yet this is just what is happening to our "halfway churches." The greatest difficulty facing such churches is not that the multitudes are not near by to be reached. These multitudes for the most part are of the "boarding house element" come and go, but there is always a multitude there. The greatest trial that I had the leading positions of those churches are filled with inexperienced men and women, with good intentions, who stick there for the work's sake. These "halfway churches" have not the spiritual engineers to leaven the church load. O Christian workers, be ye men or women, you have no right to desert that "halfway church!" There you are needed fifty, a hundred, times more than you are needed upon the church of the boulevard. I know of what I speak. It is simply an impossibility for any clergyman to make a success of one of those important "halfway churches" unless some of the Christian men and women who are now sitting decisively in some of our wealthier uptown churches are ready to go down and help them. Again and again in these old "halfway churches" a new session and nine members have been elected, and within six months half of them would be gone. No church on earth can stand such a dispersion as that and grow in spiritual power as it ought. Go back, O Christian men and women, to those needy "halfway churches" where you belong!

The importance of financial aid for these "halfway churches" can best be illustrated by describing the classes of people to which these churches appeal. They are not "dead beats," heathen and outcasts; they are, for the most part, young men and women students, clerks and young married people. They are many who have known what better days were like. Oh, they have been forced on account of misfortune to seek the cheaper lodgings of a town, small they can be looked after."

Now, I believe in saving the canniball on the Kongo. I believe in social settlements in the slums. I believe we do not believe in giving so much to the work in the slums and to converting the heathen that we have to leave none left to give to develop the spiritual life of the farmer's boy and the young girl clerk living almost within a stone's throw of our homes, under the shadow of the "halfway church" of a large city.

The "halfway church" must have the best of music, the best of preaching, the best of church organization. It also must have money to alleviate such poverty and suffering as may exist among its worshippers. It must be bread to the hungry and medicine to the sick; fire and clothes for the naked, and rent for the homeless as well as admonition the "Bread of Life" for all. It literally must be all things to all men. For the Bible commandment distinctly and emphatically declares that we should "do good unto all men, especially unto the household of faith." And here the "household of faith" means the members of your own church.

"What do you mean by that?" says some one to me. "Is the 'halfway church' to become a bureau of charities? With it are you going to bribe men and women into the church? If you do, you will only reach men's stomachs and develop their mercenary spirit and not their hearts." Oh, no; I would not bribe men to become Christians. But I would take care of them if they are members of the "halfway churches" and have been tripped up by misfortune. And furthermore, my brother, if you cannot teach Christian men that the best friends they have on earth in time of distress are the members of their own churches, those men will after awhile cease to revere the church. Furthermore, at this cause to love Jesus Christ himself.

If the church of the Lord Jesus Christ will not look after its members, who will? Here, for instance, is that farmer's boy about whom we were talking. He goes to business one stormy winter day without his rubber. He takes cold; pneumonia sets in. What is to become of him? He has no friends. He eats in a little restaurant five blocks from his boarding house. Shall he be hustled off to the county hospital? Shall he have no one to write to his mother and brother, miles away? Here is a poor widow struggling to be brother, father and mother to her three little girls. Sunday comes around, and the minister preaches about in the house and no proper clothing. Shall that widowed mother not have those shoes provided? Here is a young husband taken sick. You call at the house and the wife meets you at the door with a shawl about her shoulders. It is freezing cold in that room. What is the matter? Coal is $10 a ton. No credit. The salary of that young man is stopped. Has not the "halfway church" to be a practical financial helper on its Jericho road.

The "halfway church" must have consecrated leaders too. It must have outside financial aid. It must also have a church building which is open every night of the week — Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday as well as Sunday. It must appeal to its people through their social as well as their spiritual natures. Two preaching services on a Sunday, a midweek prayer meeting and a short hour for Sunday school will not be the work of a "halfway church." Four weekly sessions of prayer and praise service cannot successfully cope with saloon and billiard and dance halls and low variety theatres which compete with the vim and the vitals of a "halfway church" parlish.

The way a church should be conducted for the boarding house element is entirely different from how one should be conducted for a residential district of a boulevard. Let us compare them. "How are you, Mr. So-and-so? Where are you going to-night? I greet you thus in the electric car on your way home from business. "Oh," you say, "I am going home. I am going to spend the happiest part of my daily existence with my family. I am going to spend the evening at home with my wife and children. Come up and take dinner with me." "Yes, I will." I answer. We alight from the car on a fine street. You say "How are you" to almost every one you meet. Here all the neighbors know each other. A dear wife greets you at the door. Your children come romping through the hall at the call for dinner. When the dessert is finished we adjourn to the library or sitting room. The papers are brought out or the piano is opened or the interesting book is read. That is the way in which your evening, every day existence of your home is an influence for good.

How about the evenings of that poor farmer's son who is boarding under the shadow of the "halfway church?" He has one small hall bedroom. If he stays there too much at night the landlady complains, and gives him the gas. After he has eaten his supper if he does not find his enjoyment in the church or some of its connections in all probability he will find it in ways he ought not to find it. The "halfway church" must have for its young people places for debate, places for musical entertainment, places where the young people can assemble, or else those young people will drift off and drift away and be gone forever.

I am to-day pastor of a church of the boulevard. I would not conduct my church any differently from the old fashioned, conservative way of my forefathers if I could. But I want to tell the "halfway churches" in the boarding house districts of a great city that if I was again pastor of such a church I would do entirely different from what I once did. I would change my policy entirely and make my church attractive to the young men and the young women who live in those boarding houses. My present principle of raising my children is to let them have all the games, all the fun, all the friends, they want if they will only play those games in my home. My principle of carrying on a "halfway church" would be to keep the young people at the church or in the lecture room all I could. I would open on Sunday Jesus Christ just as earnestly as God would give me power. Then on week nights I would have stereopticon lectures. I would have debating societies. I would have reading rooms and libraries and social gatherings. In other words, as the legions of those regions fight for my young men and women at all times and bring all the week nights I would fight for them day in and day out also.

Lastly, I remark that these "halfway churches" need the very best ministers the world affords. They need ministers who have power in organizing power, in preaching ability and in consecration. Our presbyteries should select the best men they have and send out of our seminaries and say: "Here, young men, we want you for a 'halfway church.' We will support you. We will not simply put you in charge of a church and then let you starve. We will stand by you. Your needs are attended. While you work we will see that you have something to live upon." Then the strong men and men of consecration will enter these "halfway pulpits" and consider they are on the honor list of the gospel warriors of the ages instead of among the unfortunates who are heading a fallen cause. Then will be in an outside standpoint their churches seem to be going down.

What will become of these young men and women about the "halfway churches" if we do not save them? They will spiritually die. Instead of being brought to the feet of the Master they will drift out and many of them will become gamblers and debauchees and drunkards and outcasts. Many of them will sink into the degradation of the slums. Many of them—aye, perhaps most of them—will be lost forever. The work of the downtown churches is important. The work of the boulevard church is also important. But the mightiest work on earth which is given to any church to do is given to the "halfway church," which touches, for the most part, a class of young people at the vitally important time of their spiritual lives. May God help those churches and help us to help them in the name of Jesus Christ.

During the late civil war in a certain battle the Union soldiers had fought all day long and were completely exhausted. One of the Indiana regiments was almost ready to mutiny and turn and flee. But in the dark hours of the night one of the officers called to his men as he said: "Boys, look! We are not the best in those nurses—those women far out to the front—caring for our sick and dying. They have been working hard all day long. Let us continue to be as faithful as they." May you, O Christian workers, in the "halfway church" open your eyes to spiritual means not only of saving sinners in your own churches, but of inspiring the whole of a "halfway church" parish with renewed energy to save souls where God has placed us.

A Hard One to Read.

Mrs. Dott took a lot of lots in Mr. Lott's last sale and bought one. Now Mrs. Dott got she put aside part of the lot for her daughter Dot's dot. But Mr. Lott met Mrs. Dott and told her that she had lost on all the last lots she had put into his lottery as well as on the lot she had paid for with Dot's dot, so, besides Dot having then no dot, poor Mrs. Dott had lost her lot. Neither was Mr. Lott pleased, for he admired Mrs. Dott's daughter Dot and had coveted her dot, so he consoled himself with his cousin Lottie, who unfortunately was rather dotty.

A Cavalry Reform.

Gen. Baden-Powell, the inspector-general of cavalry of the British forces, has just inaugurated a reform which is so sensible that it deserves attention. Until now cavalry recruits on joining have been put through a course of drill riding in the riding schools, which has not only done much to disharten them, and thereby retarded their training, but which has quite often broken their spirit. Gen. Baden-Powell has abolished this method. He has arranged that the recruits is to be introduced to his horse under conditions, calculated to inspire confidence, and that his powers as a rider should be developed gradually. Under the new plan the recruit is sent out into the field in a quiet mount, and rides about as he pleases, with and without a saddle. He is allowed to familiarize himself with the animal before any serious riding takes place, and thus acquires, not only confidence, but also a liking for and interest in his work. Afterwards the polishing work takes place in the riding school, but it has been shown that the use of the bridle and roughness by which it was formerly attained, and which was foolishly regarded by the old cavalry as riding masters as indispensable to proper instruction.

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS SICK?

Let your morning urine stand for 24 hours in a glass or vessel, and then if it is milky or cloudy, or contains a reddish brick-dust sediment, or if particles or germs float about in it, your kidneys are diseased. If the kidneys are well they filter just so much blood, but if they are sick or weak from any cause, they leave the poison in the blood, and this poison affects the entire system.

It is natural to pass urine three times a day, but many who regard themselves as healthy are obliged to rise as often as to ten times daily and are obliged to get up frequently during the night. They have sick kidneys and bladder and don't know it. Smith's Buchu Lithia Pills cure rheumatism and all Kidney and Bladder troubles, and make new, rich blood.

We will send you a generous sample post paid Free, together with our large book on the above mentioned diseases. Address, W. F. MADDEN Ph.G., 79 St. James Street, Montreal, Canada.

CAN OBTAIN NEW HEALTH AND STRENGTH THROUGH DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

Mr. Edgard Mariel, 98 St. Peter street, Quebec, is one of the thousands of people throughout Canada who cheerfully admit that they are kept in health and strength through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. To a reporter who interviewed him, Mr. Mariel said,—"The present condition of my health contrasts strikingly with what I was nine months ago. Then I felt that I was almost at death's door, while now I am strong and well. This happy change is entirely due to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I am a working man, and it is little wonder that after years of diligent toil my system was gradually run down, my blood got as thin as water, and I grew so poorly that the least exertion would have me weak and trembling. I consulted a doctor, who said that I was run down through hard work, but his medicine did not help me any. A few weeks later I was forced to quit work, and almost for six months I remain in bed most of the time. One day a fellow workman called to see me, and induced me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before the box of pills was finished I had a better appetite and relished my meals, and with the same new strength. In a few weeks I was able to go out again, and in about six weeks from the time I began using the pills I was able to return to work, my health completely restored and my strength as vigorous as ever it had been. I attribute my complete recovery entirely to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I think every hard working man would be benefited by a box of these pills occasionally."

Mr. Mariel's advice should be taken by every workingman. The only way to get rich, strength is to keep the blood rich and pure, and the only way to get rich, strength producing blood is through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers, or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THIS MAN'S MYSTERIOUS POWER HEALS WHEN ALL OTHERS FAIL

Defeats Deadly Diseases

Cures Hundreds by New and Marvelous Methods of Treatment.

MAKES THE LAME WALK AND THE DEAF HEAR

And Performs Other Seeming Miracles That Pass Understanding—No Disease He May Not Cure.

Has He Supernatural Gifts?

Discards Useless Drugs and Medicines, Yet Heals Hopeless Invalids Pronounced Incurable by Physicians.

Offers Services and Home Treatment Free of Charge to Rich and Poor Alike---Believes It His Duty to God and Man to Labor for the Sick and Afflicted Who Stand in Need.

New York, June 20.—Special Correspondence.—The mysterious healing power of Professor Wallace Hadley, of this city, which enables him to cure hopeless invalids when doctors, drugs and all other means have failed, has aroused widespread wonder and comment in all this city. It is known that he has discarded the useless drugs of the past and relies by physicians and accomplishes these marvels by a new, wonderful method of treatment unlike any heretofore known to science. Indeed one woman goes so far as to state that Professor Hadley does not heal the sick again in her body when she was prepared for the grave, but has performed a miracle in the face of death. He claims that there is no disease that he may not cure, and there is every reason to believe that in the case of this man as it is, in no more than the literal truth, for since the days when men first began to have dread cancer, consumption, paralysis, deafness and other diseases supposed to be incurable, with its same ease and certainty he has cured stomach and kidney troubles, rheumatism, catarrh and the more common ailments that human flesh is heir to.

Dyed in the wool as Professor Hadley's ability, an almost equally remarkable thing about this treatment fee or fact that he gives his services free of charge to rich and poor alike, declining himself to take pay from afflicted humanity independent of fees or reward. He is indeed a strange man. Questioned upon this power he possesses as a divine gift, and that he feels it to be his duty as a Christian to help all who stand in need, without making this extraordinary fee for his services.

During a recent interview with Professor Hadley the eminent scientist firmly but courteously declined to discuss the secret of the power that he holds, but finally was induced to speak of some of the almost miraculous cures he has made. Speaking of the case of Joseph B. Stewart, of Camden, N. Y., one of his recent patients, Professor Hadley said: "Mr. Stewart had been told by various physicians that he had cancer of the stomach, complicated with kidney disease and bowel trouble; that his case was incurable and beyond the reach of medicine, and that he must realize the most of what little life was left to him before death claimed him. He suffered most terrible agonies and was on the verge of the grave, when he applied to me as a last resort. Notwithstanding what the doctors had said, I accepted the case, put him under my treatments and cured him. To-day he is worth a good many dead men, and in a recent letter to me speaks of his cure as a miracle. Then there was the case of Mrs. Mr. Mc. Wharton, of Centre Square, Pa. For twenty-five years she had been a hopeless invalid from complicated female troubles, many long months bedridden. She had been pronounced hopelessly incurable and given up to die by her physicians. But she put her faith in me, threw away her old medicines, and to-day is the picture and realization of perfect health. I took up the case of Mr. E. C. Bass of El Campo, Tex., after the doctors had given him up to death, and could do nothing to revive him. Brought to this condition by the combined attack of kidney and liver diseases, dropsy and other grievous complications, he was the torments of the damned and was almost insane with pain. Doctors and their medicines failed utterly. But I did not fail. I cured him. I restored him to life and health without his even knowing just how it was done. Then recently I received this letter from Mrs. E. C. McManus, of Birmingham, Ala., which will give you an idea of how my patients regard the power of cure." The writer copied Mrs. McManus's letter, which, word for word, is as follows: "At last I am free from pain and disease, at last my health is restored, and to me it seems little short of a miracle that you could absolutely cure any one as sick as I was. When you made me well again you cured a catarrh of the stomach of long standing, liver and kidney diseases, female troubles and piles. All these you cured, as I am the living witness. I am so thankful to you for all you have done for me, for all you saved me from. I would have suffered the last treatment May God bless you and your good work." And one from C. S. Harris, of Cato, Ark., reads, "You seem to know what the trouble is and just how to cure it. Hereafter I am through with quack doctors and their useless drugs, for they are not worth a pinch of salt compared with your treatment. I was sick so long with liver and kidney protrusion and stomach trouble that all the blood seemed gone from my body and I looked like a corpse ready for burial. I was so weak and suffering that I could not constantly that I could not work on my farm. But now I am feeling wonderfully different. You have done for me because out of my body, as you promised, and I assure you that I am perfectly well and full for it. I feel that you saved my life."

"Cases come to me from all over the country," explained the Professor, "that have baffled some of the best physicians and specialists, and one doctor has said the trouble was one thing and that next something else, until the patients were at a loss to know what disease they really were suffering from. Is it any wonder that sufferers fail to get well when they are not only treated for the wrong disease, but also given useless medicines on the hit-or-miss plan? I say that I am the make a correct and careful diagnosis of each case before I come to it, prior to seeing the cause, apply the power to cure.

"But how about those who cannot afford to come to New York to get this treat them?"

"Does not make the slightest difference. I cure them in their own homes just as I do those who call on me personally as if I went to them or they came to me. Distance is nothing when the healing power I have. All that any one who is ill in any way, from any cause, has to do is to write me a letter addressing Wallace Hadley, M.D., office 490A, No. 2255 Broadway, New York, telling me the disease they suffer from most or their principal symptoms age and sex, and I will give them a course of home treatment absolutely free of charge."

"Do you really mean that any one who is sick can write you to be cured, without paying you any money?"

"Yes, I mean just that. I believe that as a Christian it is my duty to God and man to help all who are in need. When I have been given the power to cure, I do not believe that I have the right to take any one ways his money on useless drugs when I can heal them without them. It is not alone the needless expense, but medicine and the nauseous dosing are to me more harm than good, as e'en the medicine may kill, instead of cure. I only speak the truth. We owe a duty to our fellow men and must all serve in one way or another. Where a rich man gives money I give health. I am not a millionaire, but I am able to afford to do my share toward relieving the suffering of humanity, and I am happy to give freely of my services wherever they are needed. And I am especially anxious to cure any poor mortal who has been told that his or her case is incurable, that there is no hope left on earth; or any one who has grown weary spending money on drugs and doctors in a vain search for health. If they will write to me, and accept my offer I shall be glad to help, but am almost absolute certainty that they need have no fear or danger. And it is a blessing that my power makes a letter to me do just as much good as if I had a personal visit."

Maintaining His Dignity.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

"What," asked the young physician, "is the secret of your success?"

"I make it a rule to find out what a patient wants to do," answered the wise old doctor, "then I order him to do it."

"Are you a married man?" asked the lawyer who was doing the cross-examining.

"If attacked with cholera or summer complaint of any kind send at once for a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial and use it according to directions. It acts with wonderful rapidity in subduing that dreadful disease that weakens the strongest man and that destroys the young and infirm rate. Those who have used this cholera medicine say it acts promptly and never fails to effect a thorough cure.

"No," answered the witness, who had one arm in a sling and traces of other strenuous life on his face, "I was run over by an automobile last week."

Time Has Tested It.—Time tests all things, that which is worthy lives; that which is inimical to man's welfare perishes. Time has proved Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. From a few thousand bottles in the early days of its manufacture the demand has risen so that now the production is running into the hundreds of thousands of bottles. What is so eagerly sought for must be good.

"I've been reading of a man who reached the age of fifty without being able to read, for he met a woman and for her sake made a scholar of himself in three days.

Mild in Their Action.— Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are very mild in their action. They do not cause griping in the stomach or cause disturbance there as so many pills do. Therefore, the user of Parmelee's can take them without fear of unpleasant results. They can be administered to children without imposing the penalties which follow the use of pills not so carefully prepared.

A well-known Episcopal Bishop of high church tendencies was giving a children's address in his diocese not long ago. In arranging for it with a certain butler he was surprised to hear the man ask, "Is they 'igh church or low church, sir?"

"Why, what possible difference does that make?" the Bishop inquired.

"A great deal of difference, sir," the man replied. "The low church they eats the most, and the 'igh church they drinks the most, sir!"

Pain Is Powerful Nervine.— Dyspepsia causes derangement of the nervous system, and nervous debility makes it difficult to deal successfully with. There are many testimonials as to the value of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil Pills in treating this disorder, showing that they never fail to produce good results. By giving proper tone to the digestive organs they restore equilibrium to the nerve centres.

Tax Assessor—Can you give me some idea of your property, madam? Mrs. Lady—Really, I don't know, but I wouldn't take a million dollars for it.

"Give the devil his due," he said, sharply.

"Oh, they call her Mrs. Bacon now; she's cured."

Just about the meanest thing a furnace can have is a dinky little door. Ever have one? Hit the edge as often as the hole? One has to be an expert stoker to shovel coal into some furnaces. If you're not an expert you'll get as much on the floor as in the furnace.

The Sunshine furnace is equipped with a good, big door. You can put your shovel in and drop the coal just where it is wanted—no trouble, no taking aim, no missing, no scattering, or annoyance.

Everything about the Sunshine furnace is on the same scale of thoughtfulness.

LEWIS PRINGLE.

Belleville Intelligencer:—Many friends in this city will regret to hear of the death of Mr. Lewis Pringle, who passed away this morning, 15th inst., at his late home on George st. Since last time Mr. Pringle has been seldom seen away from home, and of late he has been confined to his bed. Deceased was well-known and had many friends. He had the distinction of being the best dressed man in this city, and one of the best in Canada. The late Mr. Pringle was a native of Napanee, and was 62 years of age. He leaves to mourn his loss four daughters and three sons. The daughters are Mrs. James Cook, Belleville; Mrs. Reed, Toronto, and Misses Addie and Martha, at home. The sons are Wesley and Frank, of Barnes, and Lewis, of Hespeler. Deceased was a brother of Mr. S. W. Pringle, Napanee, and a Methodist and a Liberal.

Please either bring or send it back
With as many cents as years you are old,
We promise the number shall never be told.
Kind friends will give you something to eat,
Others will give you a musical treat;
And all will join in greeting most hearty,
Hoping you will enjoy your own Birthday Party.

Refreshments of ice cream and cake will be served, and an attractive programme rendered. A most cordial invitation is also extended to all the members of other congregations to attend this the last social re-union in the old church. As invitations to the invitation cards the admission fee for members of the Epworth congregation will be a birthday offering. For all others 15 cents. Remember the date, Tuesday evening, June 27th.

STORM WORKS HAVOC.

One of the worst rain and electric storms in years swept over Napanee and south of the town last Sunday evening, and wrought havoc and destruction, the amount of which to buildings, cattle, crops, etc., it would be difficult to estimate. The storm came up quite suddenly about 6 o'clock, while people were out at church, and those who were unprovided with umbrellas and wraps, had a thorough initiation. During the storm a heavy fall of hail occurred, which it is said played sad work with the growing crops, which in many places were levelled to the ground. Trees about town and in the country were torn up and broken.

IN NAPANEE.

There was no serious damage done in town, fortunately, though many had apparently narrow escapes from lightning, which seemed everywhere and very close. Mrs. J. Rud. Purvis's residence on John st., was struck, but the damage done was comparatively slight, striking a wooden pinnacle on the front of the house and running down to the ground and out into the street. Mr. Harry Hunter and Jack Herrington, at the same moment were driving into the E. Anderson's barn on John st. They affirm that lightning struck between the team, and a shower of gravel was thrown into their faces. The trees about town were broken either by wind or lightning.

The fire of the town freely stables was out, and as they straggled in any time from 8 to 11 o'clock, at night, their occupants were pitiful sights, scratched and ragged. While their toilet girls looked like after the battle of Waterloo, of course only storms.

Mr. Frank Mills, in the employ of W. & H. Ross, had a peculiar experience. He had driven to Bath, and returning was caught in the height of the storm near the York Road. He drove into Mr. J. F. Madden's barn for shelter, being almost blinded by the vivid flashes of lightning. When the storm abated somewhat, he came out into the light, he found that the flash of his left eye was gone. He took the train to Kingston on Monday to consult a specialist. Dr. Dupuis, who said the sight was injured by the shock, but a brilliant flash of lighting. His sight would return, should inflammation not set in.

IN THE COUNTRY.

The worst part of the storm outside the town appears to have been between the York Road west towards Bath. Mr. Wm. Young's, Fairview, two timbers were knocked off his house, and the end of a new stable blown out. The mill stand, with the day's milk, was blown to the ground for a distance of fifteen feet, and the milk spilled. A wagon shed was also blown quite a distance and wrecked.

Mr. Henry Moore, North Fredericksburgh, was a heavy loser through the storm. His large barn was demolished, and a horse killed. Another horse and two cows were fortunately saved. Timbers fairly flew in the air, and lent them until they were taken out. Some of the timbers were carried by the wind half way across a hundred acre field.

Mr. Ira B. Schell's large barn was also blown down and torn to pieces. A smaller barn unroofed and the cupola blown off the new barn on the farm.

Mr. Nell Hill's drive house and Mr. Wm. Fraser's barn were blown down on the same street.

Mr. Nelson Bowen's drive house unroofed, and the road so blocked with fallen trees and debris, that it was impassable for quite a time.

Vanalstine's barn on the old Bristol farm was blown down, and Geo. I. Perry's small drive house was carried off its foundation and blown a distance of thirty feet. Apple and ornamental trees were also blown down and greatly damaged.

The roof was blown off the new barn on the Fairbairn farm, York Road, occupied by Mr. George Fairbairn, Napanee.

Mr. Harvey Smith's drive house was struck by lightning, but only a few shingles were knocked off.

Mr. W. H. Crabbe, Big Creek, informs us that about thirty-seven trees ago a similar storm passed over the same neighborhood. His crop was then almost totally destroyed, and the same barn was unroofed at the time.

One of the heaviest losers was Mr. Benedict Thompson, Bath P.O., formerly Hon. Mr. Ova Switzer.

Mr. Thompson's barn, which was also recently struck by lightning and completely destroyed, including five cows, a number of horses, binder, mower, and all other implements, about ten tons of pressed hay, waggons, sleighs, harness, pens, chickens, etc., etc. In fact the loss is almost incidental, which is not a third of the loss.

DESMOND.

The young people of this vicinity spent Saturday at a picnic held in Mr. Johnson's grove. Boating, games and dancing were indulged in, and those who were present report a very enjoyable time.

Miss Patterson, Moscow, spent Sunday at Mr. H. F. Bell's.

Miss Bertie Werner, Centreville, has returned home, after spending a few weeks with Mrs. Ova Switzer.

We are sorry to say that rumor says we are going to lose one of our popular young ladies, Miss Ethel Bell.

Mr. R. B. Switzer and Mrs. L. Switzer spent Sunday last at Centreville.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Lockwood, Enterprise, at Mr. J. Switzer's.

Mr. Urban and Miss Minnie Wilson at J. Switzer's.

Mr. Stanley Rose, Maple Avenue, at W. Sawyer's.

Miss Gertrude Wagar, Centreville, at Mr. Hoag's, Desmond.

Messrs. Roy Stewart and Willie Macklem at Camden East.

Miss Catherine McKeown at A. D. Bell's.

CHAMBERS.

We are sorry to lose Mr. Boyce, who has left Addylousville to work.

Our mill is doing fine grinding under the new owner, Mr. Woodruff, of Desmond.

We are sorry to lose Mrs. and Miss Cloce, who are selling out and going to Kingston and London, England, respectively.

Mr. Hugh Milling spent Monday in Kingston.

The thunder storm passed through here Sunday evening, leaving much rain in its track. It tore down one barn and unroofed another for Mr. S. Shell. It unroofed Mr. Hill's drive house; tore down Mr. Fraser's barn and made it into kindling wood. Also uncoofed W. H. Bush's drive house, and uprooted trees by the dozen, completely blocking the road. But the saddest was the way it used Ben. Vanalstine's barn, completely destroying it. Only a few purchased the property at a large price, and it seems a pity that it is not left without any outbuildings just at present, when the crop must go soon be housed. It also destroyed a number of trees around the new bay barn of Mr. Geo. I. Perry, which was also unroofed, sealed hay, and carried about forty feet and set down. It also blew the chimneys off our stables and overturned them, etc. We think the storm was more severe here than in any other locality.

Mr. Shepherd is putting in a new well, as we may look for better service from our milk dreavers soon.

The strawberry and ice cream festival at the White Church, Morven, was well attended from here, and everyone seemed well satisfied in every way.

Miss Cloce's sale of household effects was well attended Tuesday.

The masons have finished laying the cement brick of the new addition Fred Perry is building to his house.

Electric Light Meeting.

Large Attendance — Splendid Addresses — By-Law Will Probably Carry—Inside Information.

A large number of ratepayers, including a few ladies, gathered at the Opera House on Monday evening to hear the matter of municipal ownership of an electric light plant in Napanee discussed.

Mayor Lowry occupied the chair and in his opening remarks said those present were well aware of the object of the meeting. The Town Council had done all they could do, and it now remained with the ratepayers. An invitation was extended to any person in the audience to take a seat on the platform and speak for or against the by-law.

- CONMEE ACT QUASHED.

Mr. A. B. Kimmerly, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light committee, said the Council had succeeded in clearing the way that a new plant could be installed. If the by-law carried, the Council would have to let Mr. Kelsch, the electrician, of Montreal, to run the machinery. He had had correspondence with several towns where they have put in plants, and all had a good word to say in favor of municipal ownership. If Napanee could get a revenue of $6,000 to $7,000 from commercial lights and $2,000.00 from street lights, the interest on all expenditure would be assured. He paid $150 each year in taxes and would do all he could to get a municipal electric light plant.

- PLANT WILL PAY.

Mr. G. M. Pierce, Mayor of Picton, said that while waiting for the meeting to begin he was thinking why he was here. Surely there was no opposition against the by-law. He was accompanied by a deputation, a lawyer, an electrician, and a politician, and thought there would be no doubt about the by-law carrying. They heard them speak. He took pleasure in telling Mayor Lowry that the town is not much in debt, and would certainly add the corporation to have their own plant, and had the kind of plant that the Council intend installing would pay beyond doubt. The Picton plant was first handled by the Council, and then by a Board of Commissioners. Their plant is paying and they are satisfied. He was very much surprised to learn that Napanee does not own the water privileges. They should own both plants. The ratepayers would be benefited at the revenue and would never miss paying for plant.

The chairman then called upon Mr. Thos. Symington, who said he was sorry to differ with the Mayor about the proper time to call on the ratepayers, the friends from Picton. You would not offer them your own when you would come at their own expense to look out of cars to see if you came in time. He came to hear them explain the great benefits and profits from the system over in Picton. He would not oppose any municipal plans just now, but would listen and ask for time later on in the evening.

- FACTS AND FIGURES.

Mr. E. M. Young, Barrister, Picton, a member of the Board of Commissioners in that town, expressed great pleasure at being present, but regretting the sarcasm of the previous speakers. He had not come as a paid agent for or against the by-law, but came, as the Mayor of Napanee asked to come here and give a statement of the working of their plant. He had served on the Board of Commissioners in Picton for three years and without remuneration, and was willing to make their plant a success. Picton has electric light and waterworks plants running lightly. In 1899 they had in all 1,000 lights, which commenced operations in February, 1900. One quarter of the earnings was charged to waterworks, and three-fifths to electric light, which was quite sufficient. They had never made any money out of the former, but the lighting system paid from its inception. They took over the old system and spent $15,710.00 in renewing it, Started in February, 1900, and the net earnings for the balance of the year was $705.58. That year they bought coal for $3.00 per ton, but had been able to do so since. They used about 600 tons in a season. In 1901 the net earnings were $1,737.20; 1902, $1,714.69; 1903, $2,081.60; and in 1904, $3,117.74. The rates are: one dozen on coal for fuel at $5.00 per ton. Meters supplied to ratepayer to buy a meter, and furnished light at 10c per watt. He believed it was the lowest rate charged by any steam plant in Canada. Some places charged 15c. He was installing here and a 10c rate charged, the difference would make money. He would get good value. The meter was the only fair way.

PICTON RATES.

The flat rate in Picton per month per light was arranged as follows:

	10 c.p.	16 c.p.
Light until 9 p.m.	30c	35c
Light until midnight	35c	40c
Light all night	45c	55c
Private dwellings	25c	30c
Halls and churches	9 1-2c	12 1-2

All users of meters were furnished current only on a meter basis of 3c per watt. Private halls and churches which with whom it is optional. He advised the election two good business men as commissioners and urged them to use their ability to make the plant pay.

They are going to build rock shed and dock there this summer and get coal in early. Thereby save money.

C.—How does it affect taxes in P'ct'n?

A.—Don't affect taxes; surplus after paying debenture.

Q.—Would not cost be greater if not connected with waterworks?

A.—Yes. Part of Commissioners' duty.

Mr. W. T. Gibbard was there for information. Cost, Picton $2,680.00 per year for lighting and electric and town property.

Mr. W. T. Waller—Did they get the light?

Mr. Gibbard—I guess so.

Mr. Waller—We paid and didn't get the light.

Mr. Symington—Have you money enough on hand to meet renewals required by plant?

Mr. Young—We are putting in new coal shed and expect to get $2 per ton for which we are going to pay our debenture.

IN DANGER WITHOUT LIGHT.

Mr. W. S. Herrington, K.C., was the next speaker. He said the matter had been agitated for several years, and in the last municipal election, no councillor could be elected who was not in favor of the system. The present Council had done its duty fairly and thanks were due Messrs. Scallen, M.P.P., the way. They were going the proper way so that the town could go on and erect its own plant. He was in accord with the people themselves, and they would be in danger without the light or not. Last Sunday night was a case in point. They had not been without the light for a week before, and were in a sad way indeed.

Electric Light Meeting.

one at the Eastern church, the other at the Anglican. It was dangerous for them to go home in the intense darkness, and he had to send word for them to spend the night with friends. Should we have an epidemic of burglary what an outcry would be raised because the town is not lighted. We rarely did not need a repetition of the lamentable Angus McLeod murder. We must provide the light if we wish to have a progressive and up-to-date town, and it seems we will have to provide the plant ourselves. Private companies make money, and so can the town with effective management. We would like a deep debt of gratitude to the Picton gentlemen, who had so fairly and fully explained the working of the plant in their town.

Mr. W. T. Gibbard endorsed what Mr. Hersinghe had said. It is only a matter of whether our town is in a position to put in a plant with the high rate of taxes now levied. No private company would enter the town to-day and put in a system, as there was no money in it. Would there be income enough that the taxes would not have to be raised? We need light of some kind.

ONLY WAY OUT OF DARKNESS.

Ex-Mayor Thos. Jameson considered it a necessity to put in a plant, as it was the only way out of darkness into light.

SOME MACHINERY STATISTICS.

Mr. T. O. Crandall, electrician, Picton, said the machinery put in the plant there during the past fifteen years was in good shape. A Wheelock engine put in fifteen years ago had cost $5 for repairs, and another put in five years ago had cost five cents. The dynamo installed five years ago was running constantly. One accident delayed light for one night and only cost labor to repair it. There have been more improvements in electrical machinery in the past five years than in the previous twenty-five years. Machines now are practically indestructible.

Mr. R. A. Norman, the father of electric light in Picton, was the next speaker. There was only one vote registered against the canning factory by-law, and he was sure there would not be even one against the electric light by-law.

NAPANEE BEHIND THE TIMES.

Napanee is about sixteen years behind Picton in discussing this question, but could take advantage of the mistakes Picton made. You can keep a splendid indestructible dynamo. He admired the Mayor and Council for the action they have taken. Picton had several chances to sell their plant, but the Council never considered it seriously. Napanee can put in a perfect plant for $35,000, which, spread over thirty years, would cost $2,024.95 a year. In 1899 they asked the ratepayers of Picton for a dynamo to handle 2,200 lights, and were asked what guarantee they had that 2,200 lights could be sold. One canvass produced consumers for 1,477. Vote your $35,000, put in duplicate machinery, and be up-to-date. Napanee is just as good a town as Picton ever was. Picton is not the only place—others are seeing the same progress, and Napanee could do so also. A letter was read relating the experience of the Town of Perth, which spoke in high terms of the results with a municipal plant in that town.

2,200 LIGHTS TO START WITH.

Mr. G. F. Rutter said that Napanee had 2,300 lights to start with.

Mr. Norman—I would like to have the franchise, at Picton prices.

Mr. Symington thought he was the most unfortunate man in the world, as he was always misunderstood. Did not intend any insult to the gentleman from Picton. Show me a man who has gas in his kitchen for fuel and his house lighted by same, that would vote to double his taxes. What ruined the two Electric Light Companies in this town? For seventeen long years his company hadn't made a cent, and suspended thousands of dollars in trying to give the town light.

PREJUDICE AND PITY.

There was a great deal of prejudice against the present company, and he thought they were more deserving of pity. He advocated instead of building a new plant, to take over the old system at a fair valuation. Could then have nine months of water power and fall back on steam for the other time.

Mr. C. A. Graham—Five or six times the Fire, Water and Light committee tried to meet the Napanee Electric Light Co., and failed every time through neglect of the members of the Board of Directors.

INSIDE INFORMATION.

Miss Shirley being conversant with the mode of operating the electric light plant, after listening to the statements made by Mr. Symington which would convey a strong impression of the actual facts, felt she had an equal right as a citizen and ratepayer, as well as one most heavily interested in personalities, but as Mr. Symington has referred to the unreasonable conduct of the late J. Cartwright, she wished to briefly speak of a communication which she had received from the hon. gentleman which she treasured from the issues of her letter to him and which she said was merely an acknowledgement full of kindly statement of facts, and in support of what she said an invitation was extended to any business man, desirous of learning the true facts of the case, to have this statement corroborated by the inspection of documentary correspondence that is in her possession.

Another instance was a stockholder who was paying a considerable sum more for the lighting of his residence than he could possibly get for the same amount of light, was rewarded for his unknown generosity by not receiving any dividends from the company. Miss Shirley gave her opinion of the impression that had been made upon her mind regarding the sale of bonds of the Gas Co., and contrasted it with the sale of stock once proposed to her in a letter received from the President of the Napanee Waterworks Co. Another matter of interest to the citizens of our town is that during the time the Council was anticipating and was promised an option on the plant immediately after the amalgamation of the J. R. Scott and Napanee Electric Light plants) instead of giving the town the promised option, they were negotiating with an outside individual.

Mr. Symington was asked to reply, but declined.

NOTES.

Lanterns were very conspicuous after the meeting, much to the amusement of the gentlemen from Picton.

The Picton visitors were all fluent speakers, and made a marked impression on the audience.

Mr. Young said they knew no politics in Picton when electing commissioners, and advised Napanee electors to do the same.

The most of the audience remained interested listeners until the close of the meeting, within half an hour of midnight.

BY ROYAL WARRANT MILLERS TO H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

Is "Royal Household" Really the Best Flour?

Thousands of women who do their own baking know it is the best, by results—they don't care about the reasons—but those who have not tried it may want to know why it is the best.

Of course any maker of flour—with the same experience—the same facilities for selecting the best wheat—the same tremendous plant equipment for milling, and the same process for Electrical Purification of flour could make just as good flour as ROYAL HOUSEHOLD—if he had the genius for flour making.

But no other flour maker in Canada has all these requisites and facilities, therefore no flour equal to ROYAL HOUSEHOLD is made in this country.

In these talks we shall give you good reasons why ROYAL HOUSEHOLD is the best flour and why it is the cheapest flour for you to use.

THE WINGS OF THE MORNING

BY LOUIS TRACY.

"I promise."

Iris stopped forth. She was flushed a little, and, to cover her confusion, maybe, she picked up a rifle.

"Now there are two guns," she said as she stood near him.

He could see through the tail of his eye that a slight but elegantly proportioned young gentleman of the seafaring profession had suddenly appeared from nowhere. He was glad she had taken this course. It might better the position were the Dyaks to see her thus.

"The moment I tell you you must fall flat," he warned her. "No ceremony about it. Just flop!"

"I don't know anything better calculated to make one flop than a bullet," she laughed. Not yet did the tragedy of the broken legs appeal to her.

"Yes, but it achieves its purpose in two ways. I want you to adopt the precautionary method."

"Trust me for that. Good gracious!" The sailor's rifle went off with an unexpected bang that froze the exclamation on her lips. Three Dyaks were attempting to run the gantlet to their beleaguered comrades. They carried a jar and two wicker baskets. He with the jar fell and broke it. The others doubled back like hares, and the first man dragged himself after them. Jenks did not fire again.

Iris watched the wounded wretch crawling along the ground. Her eyes grew moist, and she paled somewhat. When he vanished she looked into the valley and at the opposing ledge; three men lay dead within twenty yards of her. Two others dangled from the rocks. It took her some time to control her quavering utterance sufficiently to say:

The sailor's rifle went off with an unexpected bang.

"I hope I may not have to use a gun. I know it cannot be helped, but if I were to kill a human being I do not think I would ever rest again."

"In that case I have indeed murdered sleep today," was the unfeeling reply.

"No, no! A man must be made of sterner stuff. We have a right to defend ourselves. If need be, I will exercise that right. Still, it is horrid, oh, so horrid!"

She could not see the sailor's grim smile. It would materially affect his rest for the better were he able to slay every Dyak on the island with a single shot. Yet her gentle protest pleased him. She could not at the same time be callous to human suffering and be Iris. But he declined the discussion of such sentiments.

"You were going to say something when a brief disturbance took place," he inquired.

"Yes. I was surprised to find how hot the ledge has become."

"You notice it more because you are obliged to remain here."

After a pause she said:

"I think I understand now why you were so upset by the loss of our water supply. Before the day ends we will be in great straits, enduring agonies from thirst!".

"Let us not meet the devil halfway," he rejoined. He preferred the unfair retort to a confession which could only foster dismay.

"But, please, I am thirsty now."

He moved uneasily. He was only too conscious of the human weakness, common to all mankind, which creates a desire out of sheer inability to satisfy it. Already his own throat was parched. The excitement of the early struggle was in itself enough to engender an acute thirst. He thought it best to meet their absolute needs as far as possible.

"Bring the tin cup," he said. "Let us take half our store and use the remainder when we set. Try to avoid breathing through your mouth. The hot air quickly affects the palate and causes an artificial dryness. We cannot go for a period of water. It is largely imagination."

Iris needed no second bidding. She carefully measured out half a pint of the unsavory fluid—the dregs of the casks and the scourings of the ledge.

"I will drink first," she cried.

"No, no," he interrupted impatiently. "Give it to me"

The American Farmer the Best in the World.

The American farmer is the greatest man in the world to-day because he is master of the soil—he is gaining in intelligence quite as rapidly as his products are increasing in magnitude. Our recent combines of capital in United States measured in money are enormous, yet such figures sink into insignificance when compared to the money brain and brawn invested in agricultural industries. For instance, the farmers of Minnesota and Dakota have received $200,000,000 for their products in a single year. The farmer knows what Nature will bring forth for him from his experience in the past. He knows if certain seeds are planted and properly cared for that Nature will take care of the rest. In the red blood corpuscles. As an alterative extract, made only of herbs and roots, it goes about its work in nature's way. It stimulates the liver into proper action, and feeds the worn-out nerves, stomach and heart on pure blood. Used for over a third of a century it has sold more largely than any other blood medicine in the United States. More bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery are sold to-day than ever before—that is a true test of its merits—sailing past thirty-eight years of deserved popularity.

Dr. Pierce's "Medical Adviser" sent on receipt of stamps to cover mailing only. Send 31 one-cent stamps for book in paper covers, or 50 stamps for cloth bound volume. Address Dr. R.V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.

She pretended to be surprised.

"As a mere matter of politeness"—

"I am sorry, but I must insist."

She gave him the cup over his shoulder. He placed it to his lips and gulped steadily.

"There," he said gruffly. "I was in a hurry. The Dyaks may have another rush at any moment."

Iris looked into the vessel.

"You have taken none at all," she said.

"Nonsense!"

"Mr. Jenks, be reasonable! You need it more than I. I d-dont want to—live w-without—you."

His hands shook somewhat. It was well there was no call for accurate shooting just then.

"I assure you I took all I required," he declared, with unnecessary vehemence.

"At least drink your share to please me," she murmured.

"You wished to humbug me," he grumbled. "If you will take the first half I will take the second."

And that was the only way. The few mouthfuls of tepid water gave them new life. Nevertheless by high noon they were suffering again. The time passed, very slowly. The sun rose to the zenith and filled the earth and air with his ardor. It seemed to be a miracle—now appreciated for the first time in the history of the sea did not dry up and the leaves wither on the trees. The silence, the deathly inactivity of all things, became intolerable. The girl found it hard to confine her thoughts to the task of the hour. She displayed alert watchfulness, an instant readiness to warn her companion of the slightest movement among the trees or by the rocks to the northwest, this being the arc of their periphery assigned to her.

Looking at a sunlit space from cover and looking at the same place when sweltering in the direct rays of a tropical sun are kindred operations strangely diverse in achievement. Iris could not reconcile the physical sensitiveness of the hour with the careless hardihood of the previous days. Her eyes ached somewhat, for she had tilted her sou'wester to the back of her head in the effort to cool her throbbing temples. She put up her right hand to shade the too vivid reflection of the glistening sea and was astounded to find that a few minutes' exposure of her hand was scorched. A faint sound of distant shouting disturbed her painful reverie.

"How is it," she asked, "that we feel the heat so much today? I had hardly noticed it before."

"For two good reasons—forced idleness and sudden and severe confinement to a rock. Moreover, this is the hottest day we have experienced on the island. There is not a breath of air, and the hot weather has just commenced."

"Don't you think," she said huskily, "that our position here is quite hopeless?"

"That was always an unpleasant probability."

"We had water then. Even with an ample supply it would be difficult to hold out. As things are, such a course becomes simply impossible."

Her despondency pierced his soul. A slow agony was consuming her.

"It is hard, I admit," he said. "Nevertheless you must bear up until night falls; then we will either obtain water or leave this place."

"Surely we can do neither."

"We may be compelled to do both."

"But how?"

In this his hour of extremest need the man was vouchsafed a shred of luck. Before he could frame a feeble pretext for his too sanguine prediction a sampan appeared 800 yards from Turtle beach, strenuously paddled by three men. The vague hallooing they had heard was explained.

The Dyaks, though to the manner born, were weary of sun scorched rocks and salt water. The boat was coming in response to their signals, and the sight inspired Jenks with fresh hope. Like a lightning flash came the reflection that if he could keep them away from the well and destroy the sampan now hastening to their assistance, perhaps conveying the bulk of their stores, they would gain the alternative of abandoning their chief on the few pitiable plants growing on the north shore.

"Come quick!" he shouted, adjusting the back sight of a rifle. "Lie down and aim at the front man of the boat, a little short if anything. It doesn't matter if the bullets strike the sea first."

He placed the rifle in readiness for her and commenced operations himself before Iris could reach his side. Soon both rifles were pitching twenty shots a minute at the sampan. The result of their long range practice was not long in doubt. The Dyaks danced from seat to seat in a state of wild excitement. One man was hurled overboard. Then the craft lurched seaward in the strong current, and Jenks told Iris to leave the rest to him.

Before he could empty a second magazine a fortunate bullet ripped a plank out and the sampan filled fast, with went down amid a shrill yell of execration from the back of the cliff. The two Dyaks yet living endeavored to swim ashore, but a man-eating shark contested reefs. The sailor did not even trouble about them. After a few frantic struggles each doomed wretch flung up his arms and vanished. In the clear atmosphere the onlookers could see black fins cutting the pellucid sea.

They were yielding down the thirst fiend was again slowly salting their veins—when something of a dirty white color fluttered into sight from behind the base of the opposite cliff. It was rapidly withdrawn, to reappear after an interval. Now it was held more steadily and a brown arm became visible. As Jenks did not fire, a turbaned head popped into sight. It was the Mohammedan.

"No shoot it," he roared. "Me English speak it."

"Don't you speak Hindoostanee?" shouted Jenks in Urdu of the higher proficiency.

"Yes, sir!" was the joyful response. "Will your honor permit his servant to come and talk with him?"

"Yes, if you come unarmed."

"And the chief, too, sahib?"

"Yes, but listen! On the first sign of treachery I will shoot both of you!"

"We will keep faith, sahib. May kites pick our bones if we fail!"

Then there stepped into full view the renegade Mussulman and his leader. They carried no guns; the chief wore his creese.

"Tell him to leave that dagger behind!" cried the sailor imperiously. As the enemy demanded a parley he resolved to adopt the conqueror's tone from the outset. The chief obeyed, with a scowl, and the two advanced to the foot of the rocks.

"Stand close to me," said Jenks to Iris. "Let them see you plainly, but pull your hat well down over your eyes."

She silently followed his instructions. Now that the very crisis of their fate had arrived she was nervous, shaken, conscious only of a desire to sink on her knees and pray.

The two halted some ten paces in front of the rocks, and the sailor's guests surveyed each other. It was a fascinating spectacle, this drama in real life. The yellow faced Dyak, gaudily attired in a striped shirt of red and blue pantaloons of Chinese silk, a man young and powerfully built, and the brown skinned, white clothed Mohammedan, lithe and puny with birthship, looked up at the occupants of the ledge. Iris, slim and boyish in her male garments, was overawed by the cool sailor, but her face was blood stained, and Jenks wore a six weeks' stubble of beard. Holding their rifles with bent ease, with revolvers trapped to their sides, they presented a warlike and imposing tableau in their inaccessible perch. In the path of the emissaries lay the bodies of the slain. The Dyak leader scowled again as he passed them.

"Sahib," began the Indian, "my chief, Taung S'All, does not wish to have any more of his men killed in a foolish quarrel about a woman. Give her up, he says, and he will either leave you here in peace or carry you safely to some place where you can find a ship manned by white men."

"A woman!" said Jenks scornfully. "That is idle talk! What woman is here?"

This question nonplused the native. "The woman whom the chief saw half a month back, sahib."

"Taung S'All was bewitched. I view his men so quickly that he saw spirits."

The chief caught his name and broke in with a question. A volley of talk between the two men was enlivened by expressive gestures by Taung S'All, who several times pointed to Iris, and Jenks now anathematized his thoughtless folly in permitting the Dyak to approach so near. The Mohammedan, of course, had never seen her and might have persuaded the other that in truth there were two men only on the rock.

His fears were only too well founded. The Mussulman salaamed respectfully and said:

"Protector of the poor, I cannot gainsay your word, but Taung S'All says that the maid stands by your side and that any vision sent to confuse the eyes will mean the extermination of his whole tribe by an English warship. Tell him to take away his boats and never visit this isle again. Perhaps he will then forget his treacherous attempt to murder us while we slept last night."

How Do You Know?

The chief glared defiantly, while the Mohammedan added:

"Sahib, it is best not to anger him too much. He says he means to have the girl. He saw her beauty that day, and she inflamed his heart. She has cost him many lives, but she is worth a sultan's ransom. He cares not for friendships. They cannot reach his village in the hills. By the tomb of Nizam-ud-din, sahib, he will not leave you if you give her up, but if you refuse he will kill you both. And what is one woman more or less in the world that she should cause strife and bloodletting?"

The sailor knew the eastern character too well not to understand the man's amusement that he should be so solicitous about the fate of one of the weaker sex. It was seemingly useless to offer terms, yet the native was clearly so anxious for an amicable settlement that he caught at a straw.

"You come from Delhi?" he asked.

"Honored one, you have great wisdom."

"None but a Delhi man swears by the tomb on the road to the Kutub. You have escaped from the Andamans?"

"Sahib, I did but slay a man in self defense."

"Whatever the cause, you can never again see India. Nevertheless you would give many years of your life to visit once more with the bazaar folk."

The brown skin assumed a sallow tinge.

"That is good speaking," he gurgled.

"Then help me and my friend to escape. Compel your chief to leave the island. Kill him! Plot against him! I will promise you freedom and plenty of rupees. Do this, and I swear to you I will come in a ship and take you away. The miss sahib's father is powerful. He has great influence with the Indian government."

Taung S'All was evidently bewildered and annoyed by this passionate appeal which he did not understand. He demanded an explanation, and the ready witted native was obliged to invent some plausible excuse. Yet when he raised his face to Jenks there was the look of a hunted animal in his eyes.

"Sahib," he said, endeavoring to conceal his agitation, "I am one among many. A word from me, and they would cut my throat. If I were with you there on the rock I would die with you, for I was the Sumaon regiment when the trouble befell me. It is of no avail to bargain with a tiger, sahib. I suppose you will not give up the miss sahib. Pretend to agree with me. I will help in any way possible."

Jenks' heart bounded when this unlooked for offer reached his ears. The unfortunate Mohammedan was evidently eager to get away from the piratical gang into whose power he had fallen. But the chief was impatient, if not suspicious, of these long speeches.

Angrily holding forth a rifle, the sailor shouted:

"Tell Taung S'All that I will slay him and all his men ere tomorrow's sun rises. He knows something of my power, but not all. Tonight at the twelfth hour you will find a rope hanging from the rock. Tie thereto a vessel of water. Fail not in this. I will not forget your services. I am Anstruther Sahib of the Belgaum regiment."

The native translated his words into a fierce defiance of Taung S'All and his Dyaks. The chief glanced at Jenks and Iris with an ominous smile. Then he addressed a few words to the Mohammedan.

"Then, sahib, there is nothing more to be said. Beware of the trees on your right. They can send silent death even for the fleetest of foot. Taung S'All and I will not fail you tonight, on my life," cried the interpreter.

"I believe you. Go! But inform your chief that once you have disappeared round the rock whence you came I will talk to him only with a rifle."

Taung S'All seemed to comprehend the Englishman's emphatic motions. Waving his hand defiantly, the Dyak turned, and, with one parting glance of mute assurance, the Indian followed him.

Iris touched his arm and he told her all that had taken place. Iris became very downcast when she grasped the exact state of affairs. She was almost certain when the Dyaks proposed a parley that reasonable terms would result. It horrified her beyond measure to find that she was the rock on which negotiations were wrecked. Hope died within her. The bitterness of death was in her breast.

"What an unlucky influence I have had on your existence!" she exclaimed. "If it were not for me this trouble at least would be spared you. Because I am here you are condemned. Again, because I stopped you from shooting that wretched chief and his companions they are now pursuing your life as a forfeit. It is all my fault. I cannot bear it."

She was on the verge of tears. The strain had become too great for her. After indulging in a wild dream of freedom, to be told that they must again endure the irksome confinement, the active suffering, the slow horrors of a siege in that rocky prison, almost distracted her.

Jenks was very stern and curt in his reply.

"We must make the best of a bad business," he said. "If we are in a hole, the Dyaks are not much better off, and eighteen of their number are dead or wounded. You forget, too, that Providence has sent us a most useful ally in the Mohammedan. When all is said and done, things might be far worse than they are."

Never before had his tone been so cold, so austere or abrupt, not even in the old days when he purposely endeavored to make her dislike him.

She walked along the ledge and timidly bent over him.

"Forgive me!" she whispered. "I did forget for the moment not only the goodness of Providence, but also your self sacrificing devotion. I am only a woman, and I don't want to die yet, but I will not live unless you, too, are saved."

Once already that day she had expressed this thought in other words. Was some shadowy design flitting through her brain? Suppose they were faced with the alternative of death from thirst or yielding to the Dyaks. Was there another way out? Jenks looked at her keenly, but said nothing him. He must divert her mind from this dreadful brooding.

"The fact is," he said, with a feeble attempt at cheerfulness, "we are both hungry and consequently grumpy. Now, suppose you prepare lunch. We will feel ever so much better after we have eaten."

The girl choked back her emotion and sadly essayed the task of providing a meal which was hateful to her. A few tins of meat and some little furrows down her soiled cheeks. But they were helpful tears, tears of resignation, not of despair. Although the "destruction that walketh at noonday" was trying her sorely, she again felt strong and sustained.

She even smiled on detecting an involuntary effort to clear her stained face. She was about to carry a biscuit and some tinned meat to the sailor when a sharp exclamation from him caused her to hasten to his side.

The Dyaks had broken cover. Running in scattered sections across the sands, they were risking such loss as the defenders might be able to inflict upon them during a brief race to the shelter and food to be obtained in the other part of the island.

Jenks did not fire at the scurrying gang. He was waiting for one man, Taung S'All. But that redoubtable person, having promptly responded this dash for liberty, had fully realized the enviable share of attention he would attract during the passage. He therefore discarded his vivid attire and by borrowing odd garments made himself sufficiently like unto the remainder of his followers to enable the sailor until the rush of men was over. Among them ran the Mohammedan, who did not look up the valley, but waved his hand.

When all had disappeared down again Jenks understood how he had been fooled. He laughed so heartily that Iris, not knowing either the cause of his merriment or the reason of his mood, looked for clemency to the flying foe, feared the sun had affected him.

He at once quitted the post occupied during so protracted a vigil.

"Now," he cried, "we can eat in peace. I have stripped the chief of his finery. His men can twit him on being fooled by a white man and engage in order to save his life. Anyhow, they will leave us in peace until night falls, so we must make the best of a hot afternoon."

But he was mistaken. A greater danger than any yet experienced now confronted them, for Taung S'All, furious and unreasoning with rage, knew if he could not obtain the girl he would slay the pair of them, and he had terrible weapons in his possession.

CHAPTER XIII.

RESIDENTS in tropical countries well know that the heat is greatest, or certainly least bearable, between 2 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

At the conclusion of a not very luscious repast Jenks suggested that they should rig up the tarpaulin in such a way as to gain protection from the sun and yet enable him to cast a watchful eye over the valley. Iris helped to make the two canvas sheets on the supports he had prepared. Once shut off from the devouring rays, the hot breeze then springing into fitful existence cooled their blistered but inspiring skin and made life somewhat tolerable.

Still adhering to his policy of combatting the first enervating attacks of thirst, the sailor sanctioned the consumption of the remaining water. As a last desperate expedient to be resorted to only in case of sheer necessity, he uncorked a bottle of champagne and filled the tin cup. The sparkling wine, with its volume of creamy foam, looked so tempting that Iris would then and there have risked its potency were not Jenks promptly withheld.

Jenks explained to her that when the wine became quite flat and insipid they might use it to moisten their parched lips. Even so, in their present superheated state, the liquor was unquestionably dangerous, but he hoped it would not harm them if taken in minute quantities.

Accustomed now to implicitly accept his advice, she fought and steadily conquered the craving within her. Oddly enough, the "thirsting" of their scorched bodies beneath the tarpaulin brought a certain degree of relief. They were supremely uncomfortable, but that was as naught compared with the relaxation from the torments previously borne.

For a long time—the best part of an hour, perhaps—they remained silent.

The sailor was reviewing the pros and cons of their precarious condition. It would, of course, be a matter of supreme importance were the Indian to be faithful to his promise. Here the prospect was decidedly hopeful. The native was an old soldier, and the ex-officer of native cavalry knew how enduring was the attachment of this poor convict to home and military service. Probably at that moment the Mohammedan was praying to the prophet and his two nephews to aid him in rescuing the sahib and the woman whom the sahib held so dear. Like all wise and all powerful Indian government is very merciful to offending natives who thus abandon their former crimes.

But, howsoever willing he might be, what could one man do among so many? The Dyaks were hostile to him and his party, and assuredly infuriated against the foreign devil who had killed or wounded in round numbers one-fifth of their total force. Very likely the hapless Mussulman would lose his life that night in attempting to bring water to the foot of the rock.

Even if the man succeeded in eluding the vigilance of his present associates, where was the water to come from? There was none on the island save that in the well. In all likelihood the Dyaks had a store in the remaining sampans, but the native ally of the beleaguered pair would have a task of exceeding difficulty in obtaining one of the jars or skins containing it.

Again, granting all things went well that night, what would be the final outcome of the struggle? How long could Iris withstand the exposure, the strain, the heartbreaking misery of the day?

He shook restlessly, not aware that the girl's sorrowful glance, luminous with love and pain, was fixed upon him. Instinctively dismissing these grisly phantoms of the mind, he asked himself what the Mohammedan exactly meant by warning him against the trees on the right and the "silent death" that might come from them. He was about to crawl forth to the lip of the rock and investigate matters in that locality was Iris, who also was busy with her thoughts, restrained him.

"Wait a little while," she said. "None of the Dyaks will venture into the open until night falls. And I have something to say to you."

There was a quiet solemnity in her voice that Jenks had never heard before. It chilled him. His heart acknowledged a quick sense of evil omen. He raised himself slightly and turned toward her. Her face, beautiful and serene beneath its disfigurements, wore an expression of settled purpose. For the life of him he dared not question her.

"That man, the interpreter," she said, "told you that if I were given up to the Dyaks the sahib followers would go away and molest you no more."

His forehead seamed with sudden anger.

"A mere bait," he protested. "In any event it is hardly worth discussion."

And the answer came, clear and resolute.

"I think I will agree to those terms."

At first he regarded her with undisguised and wordless amazement. Then the appalling thought darted through his brain that she contemplated this supreme sacrifice in order to save him. A clammy sweat bedewed his brow, but by sheer will power he contrived to say:

"You must be mad to even dream of such a thing. Don't you understand what it means to you—and to me? It is a ruse to trap us. They are ungoverned savages. Once they had you in their power they would laugh at a promise made to me."

"You may be mistaken. They must have some sense of fair dealing. Even assuming that such was their intention, they may depart from it. They have already lost a great many men, their chief having gained his main object, might be able to persuade them to take further risks. I will make it a part of the bargain that they first supply you with plenty of water. Then you, unaided, could keep them at bay for many days. We lose nothing; we can gain a great deal by endeavoring to pacify them."

"Iris," he gasped, "what are you saying?"

The unexpected sound of her name on his lips almost unnerved her. But no martyr ever went to the stake with more settled purpose than this pure woman, resolved to immolate herself for the sake of the man she loved. He had dared all for her, faced death in many shapes. Now it was her turn. Her eyes were lit with a seraphic fire her sweet face resigned as that of an angel.

"I have thought it out," she murmured, gazing at him steadily, yet scarce seeing him. "It is worth trying as a last expedient. We are abandoned by all save the Lord, and it does not appear to be his holy will to help us on earth. We can struggle on here until we die. Is that right when one of us may live?"

Her very candor had betrayed her. She would go away with these monstrous captors, endure them, even flatter them, until she and they were far removed from the island, and then—she would kill herself. In her innocence she imagined that self destruction under such circumstances was a pardonable offense. She only gave a life to save a life, and greater love than this is not known to God or man.

The sailor, in a tempest of wrath and wild emotion, had it in his mind to compel her into reason—to shake her across shakes a wayward child.

He rose to his knees with this half formed notion in his fevered brain; then he looked at her, and a mist seemed to shut her out from his sight. Was she lost to him already? Was all that had gone before an idle dream of love and grief, a wizard's glimpse of mirrored happiness and vague perils? Was Iris, the crystal souled, thrown to him by the storm lashed wave, to be snatched away by some irresistible and malign influence?

In the mere physical effort to assure himself that she was still near to him he gathered her up in his strong hands. Yes, she was there, breathing, wondering, palpitating. He folded her closely to his breast and, yielding to the passionate longings of his tired heart, whispered to her:

To be continued.

HUGH COPE ROTHWELL.

Died suddenly at his home "Mount Charles" Grantstown, on Sunday, the twenty-fifth, Captain Rothwell was the second son of the Rev. John Rothwell, B.A., Dublin, rector of Amherstisland for more than twenty years, and was born at Oxford, Ont., May 10th, 1835. His wife, who died in 1893, was Zelica Sarah, daughter of William Bell, Esq., and grand-daughter of Major Cheshire, the first of the family to own "Mount Charles." Captain Rothwell was the father of eight children, three of whom are living—one daughter, Nellie, having died in childhood. His children are, William Cope, of St. John, N.B., John Edward, Inspector of Dairies, Ont., Robert Leigh, chief accountant of the White Star Line, New York City, Charles Garnett, Superintendent of the Richardson mines, near Pitney; Mrs. J. W. Anderson, Montreal, Mrs. R. Ekston Burns, Kingston, and Mary Lovelace Rothwell residing at the home of his wife. John Rothwell was the only one who was unable to be present at the funeral, owing to the distance. Among those present at the funeral rites were Captain Rothwell's only surviving sister and her husband, Major Leigh, Ordnance Department, Toronto. Captain Rothwell was widely known for years on the lakes and had a large circle of friends. His honesty and integrity and the vigor and energy that distinguished him to the end of his life won the respect of all who knew him. The funeral was from his late residence "Mount Charles", on Wednesday morning, June 28th, and he was laid to rest beside his wife at Cataraqui."

EASTERN METHODIST CHURCH.

Work is progressing rapidly on the removal of the woodwork from the interior of the Eastern Methodist church, and it would probably be as well to say that Mr. Wallace Bros. have been fully vindicated in their action of building a new church when the rotten state were discovered upon the removal of the numerous layers of paint. The sills were so rotten that a crow bar could be run in to the floor. Mr. W. T. Waller and an efficient staff of workmen have the contract for this, it will be remembered by a number of tenders. Mr. Waller, in particular, attracted a great deal of attention at the centennial, and the church was fortunate in securing Mr. T. H. Waller, in securing them for $600. They are in the perfect state of preservation, and will be re-fitted in the new church. Mr. W. A. Rockwell is superintending the removal of the organ to the town hall, where services are being held, which will be held until further notice at the usual hours.

On Tuesday evening the Ladies' Aid Society gave a closing entertainment, in the form of a social re-union in the body of the church. Instrumental selections were given by Miss Dafoe, Mrs. Cairns-Smith and Miss Kilmersly. Vocal solos by Miss Cairns, Miss Herring, Mrs. Lindsay, Mrs. Wilson and Mr. Harry Daly. Miss Soby contributed a recitation, and interesting addresses were given by Mr. T. H. Wilson from the standpoint of the Sunday school, and Mr. M. C. Bogart on behalf of the Trustee Board. The proceedings were brought to a close by the singing of the National anthem, followed by the Doxology, and closing prayer by the pastor. During the evening a small collection was signed by over 200, who were in attendance, to be deposited in the corner stone of the new building. The ladies are to be congratulated on the success, socially and financially, of their entente itmtnl, the latter amounting to $125.00 clear of all expenses.

The Largest Jack Manufacturer in the World Writes about Zutoo

Regarding your Zutoo Tablets I beg to say: I have been a sufferer from headache since childhood and have used all or nearly all of the so-called "cures" on the market, till warned by my physician to discontinue their use on account of their bad effects on the heart. Some months since my attention was called to your Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a "sick" or "nervous" headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effect. My family use them when needed with equally good results. 'I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from headache and they never fail to give quick relief. I find them a good remedy for "sour" stomach as well as headache. I always carry them in my grip on the road and would not be without them at any cost. A. O. NORTON.

SUITS VACATION TIME

SERMON OF GREAT CONTRASTS INSPIRED BY YOSEMITE.

TALMAGIAN WORD-PAINTING

What the Preacher Saw From a Lofty Peak Overlooking the Yosemite Valley—Then, Turning From Nature to Nature's God He Exclaimed with the Psalmist: "The Strength of the Hills Is His Also."

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dixey, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., June 25.—In this sermon, suited to the vacation season, the preacher takes for his pulpit a lofty peak overlooking the Yosemite valley and for his theme the vivid impressions awakened by his inspiring surroundings. The text is Psalm xiv, 4, "The strength of the hills is his."

"Big" is a word which can be applied to the United States, but that word "big" especially can be applied to the natural wonders of Niagara Falls and Yellowstone Park and the Grand Canyon of Arizona, and, above all, to the wonderful Yosemite Valley, which, as a wonderland, has not its superior in all the world. The first time I viewed it was under specially favorable circumstances. We left the railroad in the early hours of the morning for a long, seventy-two mile drive, to this wonderful place. It was a day passing description and crowded with marvelous memories. Sometimes, during that long, twelve hours' ride, we could pick the whole carpets of wild flowers. The flora of a luxuriant springtime was bidding us welcome. Then the storm clouds shut us in and the sun disappeared. Then, as we climbed up and up the heights of the Sierra Nevadas, we shivered and endured it in a cold storm, again in a hailstorm and then in a blinding snowstorm. Our limbs became so numb that circulation was almost stopped, but on and on and on we went until it drew near to the evening hour. Then the storm cleared away. God lifted the curtains of the clouds, and suddenly the grandest view ever panoramaed before mortal eyes was mine.

"There," said the driver, "is Yosemite Valley!" "Then," said I, "one of the dreams of my life is fulfilled." But though I have dreamed many wonderful dreams, though I have seen many of the wonder scenes of the world, I never dreamed of or saw a sight like that. Chaos and cosmos, love and hate, beauty and revolting hideousness, summer and winter, hoary headed mountains with their snowcaps of spotless white and with their limbs lined knee deep in wild flowers; appalling precipices and lovers' retreats; roaring, rushing cataracts, with their "spirits of the evil winds," and rainbows playing amid the mists, and as panoramic series among the nether robes of the different falls; repulsions and fascinations—all seemed to be there. They were standing out their hands toward me and calling, "Come, brother, come and sit at my feet. Come, and I will hurl three thousand feet yonder cliffs and upon thy poor mangled body I will let the vultures and the wild beasts banquet. Come, and I will show you sights and wonders of which thou hast never conceived. Come, come!" Amid 10,000 different voices in one great chorus, "Come, come, come!" they kept calling. And the echoing mountains off in a distance threw back the calls as from great sounding boards. "Come! Come! Come!" Even to-day in imagination I can hear those strange, weird, conflicting voices calling me. Oh, the many emotions that surged through my heart and soul when I first looked down from "Inspiration height" and descended into the further valley. As the rocks and the cliffs began to close in around me I felt as did Dante with Virgil by his side in his descending into hell. At the next moment I seemed to feel that angelic companions were by my side to get me positions. Circulars free. Enter any time. Circulars free. Enter any time. for my celestial entrance. Michael Angelo painted both heaven and hell in one picture, Yosemite Valley is a "Last Judgment."

Everywhither I turned joy and sorrow, peace and anguish, happiness and terror, celestial Gabriels and demoniac Frankensteins, white winged doves and raven garmented messengers of despair, side by side as if in close quarters, were inhabiting the dark caverns of those rocks, or were waving to me from those dizzy heights, or were hovering under those tents of snow canvas, or were dwelling in the marble palaces above, yet within the range of my wondering sight. "Are those storm clouds?" I asked myself. Then I would answer, "No. Those are not storm clouds. Those are mountains reborn, for I see them waving over cathedrals and over village kirk spires." Angels seemed to be holding those mountains in their hands while listening to the worshiping supplicants within at prayer and saying, "Father, hear their supplications, are for you as soon as your earthly work is done and you shall come to dwell with Christ forever."

Here the rocks seemed to be great avalanches of snow or overtopping glaciers of ice ready to tumble down upon us and crush us. There they seemed to be whole cities in ruins, as though ten thousand Vesuviuses had belched forth their fires and demolished them, and then the demons had encamped in these broken walls and destroyed houses, just to show what awful carnage pandemonium had wrought. Here there seemed to be huge mountains cut in twain with the other half thrown away into space. There they looked like worlds just started and then left in a formative state, as though the Divine Creator had gone off and forgotten all about them. Here they seemed to be unscaled mountains, though the walls about a huge prison for lost souls. While there, again, a six hundred rock, they seemed to be signal stations lifting themselves high above the clouds to put us in touch with other worlds and with God. Thus there were of rock, these fortresses of rock, these mighty obelisks and pyramids of rock, these great sheets of rock upon which God had registered the histories of the ages, appointed to be object lessons. It was as though the Creator had opened the treasure vaults just a little that we might peer in and see his unfathomed resources. The psalmist's words, spoken thousands of years ago, were my words in the darkness of that night, and they are my words now, "The strength of the hills," or, as the revised version puts it, "The heights of the hills are his also."

As I climbed the awful, dizzy heights of one of the Sierra Nevadas, by the edge of an appalling precipice to Glacier Point, the thought came upon uppermost in my mind. Bending and bowing before we go. Up and up the sure footed beasts carry us higher and still higher. Then the rocks by the side of the precipice grow deeper and deeper at each step. At last we are at the top, after a long five mile pull. Then, by bending on to the right, you can look straight down 3,250 feet. A thin silhouette of nearly two-thirds of a mile I looked straight down upon the level fenced river. It was not a silver thread bending and winding among the many trees in the valley, but a real living snake, beautiful, but green. Its surface reflected every shade of green, from the darkest green, down to the light pool, to the lightest shades of aquamarine and chrysophrase. Yosemite falls' white garmented spray has a fall of 2,600 feet, or nearly one-half of a mile. Then, while I looked standing down into that awful precipice—looking down a pallisade so deep that I seemed to be looking into space—there came a small voice seemed to talk to me. When God called to Samuel, he called at night. To the apostle John, when on the pulpit of Glacier Point, it seemed that he called in the daytime. That voice was so real that I turned around that I turned to my wife and asked, "Were you speaking?" "No; did you hear any one talking?" "Yes." I answered; "I thought I heard a voice and that it must be the voice of the Lord."

Then the mysterious voice seemed to address me in these words: "Then you go back to your pulpit you will walk on the stone streets of a great city. You will climb long, steep, rocky mountains from the tops of which you will see the sun setting among the heaving waves of the western Pacific. To the east you can see the sunbeams of the early morning burning themselves into the golden nuggets of many mining districts. You can hear the mowing machines fighting their way through the harvest fields at your feet. But don't remember underneath you is the same rock, the same depths of rock, the same immensities of rock you now see from Glacier Point in Yosemite Valley. Remember, O man, that I put those rocks underneath thee that the waters of the Pacific might be an aquarium for thee and that the deer might feed thee and that thy home might not be built upon the sinking sands. Even in the stern rocks I am trying to teach you loving, caring, sustaining and protecting my children."

Does this voice of the unseen rocks speak to you of God's love, as on the panoramic rocks seen from Glacier Point it seemed to speak to me? Let every divine love when I stood in old Yosemite?

But the heights of the hills and the depths of the valleys of Yosemite teach that there is a present, sustaining care of a Divine Father. Those rocks were to me libraries of the past centuries and of the millenniums to come. I have read about the famous libraries of ancient Alexandria and Nineveh and Babylon. We have learned that these ancient books were so many that in Alexandria alone it took six months to destroy part of them when those parchments and manuscripts were used for common fuel to light the fires of the 4,000 bathrooms of that great city. But I want to tell you that when a man rides through Yosemite Valley and climbs its dizzy heights he is looking upon the historic pages of books older than the oldest tablets of stone exhumed from amid the ruins of an ancient Troy. He is looking at a greater library than the 66 books of Nineveh, Babylon or Alexandria combined. There he is looking upon the millions of open leaves of rock written upon by the pen of but one Author, and that pen is "the finger of God."

If the recorded pages of the books of rock found among the shelves of rock and upon the pages of rock and lying open upon the tables of rock in Yosemite Valley do not teach us that God as an author has been, during centuries upon centuries and millenniums upon millenniums ago and that he will also be, and work on during centuries and the millenniums to come, then I say the Yosemite rocks "teach us nothing." Then we have eyes to see and we will not see, and we have ears to hear and we will not hear. Every step you take, every pinnacle you make, presses home the one truth—that the Creator has been and will be eternal in his own life and eternal in his creations.

Mariposa Grove, which grows just outside of the valley and practically under the shadow of the rocks, is a living oration teach the eternal purposes and workings of the Divine Father. My, what big preachers they are! About 600 of them grow near together, as though they were ashamed of their big girths and ashamed because, like Saul, they raise their huge bodies not only head and shoulders above all others or trees, but because they make other trees look like pygmies beside them. "Grizzly Bears," "Columbia," "Havenford," "Mariposa," "Wawona," "California," "Telescopes," "The Three Graces," are some of the modern names given to these famous trees. Some of them are over 300 feet tall. One is 104 feet in circumference and 23 feet from side to side. One is cut in the middle at the base and has a square cut out of it so large that a great, three-seated carriage, with a span of horses, and four by four horses, can be driven through it. This tree was on the right of us, it was to the left of us, it was behind us, it was underneath us. One of this cane brake of trees in a neighboring grove was cut down a few years ago that its stump might be used as a dancing floor by visiting tourists. So huge, so gigantic is "Old Grizzly" that it has one branch, one right arm alone, twenty feet in circumference. When I stood under this huge monster it lifted itself so high and so wide that I felt its size almost passed human comprehension. Why, a wart on one of "Old Grizzly's" cheeks would be large enough to be used for an Indian wigwam. A goiter on his neck would be big enough to hide in out
